A VERY REMARKABLE CONJUNCTION

WEITTEN FOR THE DISPATCH. ].

In the winter months the most brilliant of the stellar constellations are visible in D. J. Lawler, the widely known havat architect, died yesterday at Chelsen, Mass., aged 68. For 50 years he had been located at East Boston, and had taken a most promi-nent part in shipbuilding and yacht designthe early evening, and it is at this season of the year that the study of astronomy is the most interesting to novices. At the present time there are a great many brilliant orbs nent part in shipbuilding and yacht design-ing. He designed and built more vessels than any of his co-laborers. Over 150 mer-chant vessels were built from his designs, and these include ships, barks, brigs and schooners of two, three and four masts. He also designed quite a number of towboats. The veteran designer had a fleet of nearly 500 vessels to his credit, and in all cases he both designed and laid the vessels down. visible on clear evenings, the best known and most conspicuous of which are Aldebaran, Capella, Betelgeuse, Rigel, Sirius, Procyon, Altair, Vega, Regulus in the handle of the sickle; the twins Castor and Pollux, and the planets Venus and Jupiter. Sirius, the prince of the fixed stars, shines with a radiance almost equal to that of Jupiter. No other fixed star can compare pneumonia December 22, 1891, at the age of 78. Mr. Coe was born in New York and was one of the pioneers overland to California in with him in brilliancy. He is in the constellation of Canis Major, which signifies one of the pioneers overland to California in 1850. He visited his children a number of times, but made the Pacific coast his home until death. He was a prominent man and was well known on the coast. He was the further of four children, two daughters and two sons. The former are Mary E., wile of C G. Redrup, of this city, now residing in Ventura, Cal., and Maggie A., the wife of W. H. Duffell, of Grace street, Thirty-second ward. the Great Dog, and rises about 7 o'clock in the evening. In the eyes of the ancient Egyptians, Sirius was the most important star in the heavens from the fact that the annual overflow of the River Nile coincided with his heliacal rising, a circumstance which led them to ascribe that important event to his influence acting conjointly with that of the sun. That coincidence, however, does not exist at the present day, as owing to the procession of the equinoxes, his conjunction with the sun takes place a little later each year, and the change in two or three thousand years has been so great that even the most ignorant and supersuitious Egyptian of the present day would scarcely credit Sirius with so extraordinary an influence.

A Beautiful Constellation,

One of the most brilliant and beautiful constellations in the heavens is Orion, which contains two stars of the first magnitude and four of the second, besides a great number of fainter stars. The two brightest stars in this constellation are Betelgeuse and Rigel, the former being of a reddish color, and the latter white. No one can fail to recognize this magnificent constellation. It rises due east and sets due west, and is distinguished by a large rectangular figure formed by four bright stars; the northern boundary of the figure is formed by Betelgease and Bellatrix, and the southern by Rigel and Saiph. In the center of the figure is a row of three stars, which in the ancient mythical astronomy represented the belt of the great warrior Orion. Three or four degrees to the south of the belt of the warrior is the tamous nebula of Orion. which may sometimes be distinguished by the naked eye. This nebula has always been an object of interest and wonder to professional astronomers, and has often con scrutinized by their keen gaze. If the nebular hypothesis is correct, the numerous nebulæ which are scattered through the stellar regions may be regarded as star manufactories, or perhaps more correctly, as stars in process of formation, and it would thus appear that the work of creation is going on at the present time, perhaps with as much activity as when our earth was first launched into boundless space. Almost everyone has probably noticed the large equilateral triangle which is formed by the bright stars Sirius, Betel-geuse and Procyon, and the right-angled triangle formed by Aldebaran, Betelgense and Rigel. These are among the most striking of the many geometrical figures in which the sky abounds.

Muslin Undergarment

in the constellation of the Flying Horse is prominent in the western sky and is nearly due north of Jupiter. It is composed of four stars of the second magnitude, Markab and Scheat forming the western side of the square, and Algenib and Alpha Androm-edu the castern, the distance between each of these stars being about 14°. As the square is situated at 9 o'clock in the evening, the star that is at the greatest altitude is Alpha Andromeder, which is the stand-ard star for the Washington Observatory. It is situated within half a degree of the prime circle of right ascension, and comes to the meridian about two minutes later than the vernal equinox or first point of the sign Aries.

Between 10 and 11 o'clock in the evening a very brilliant star is seen very nearly overhead. It is Capella, the leading brilliant of the Northern Hemisphere and the third brightest star in the heavens. It belongs to the constellation Auriga, the Char-ioteer, and is situated in the edge of the Milky Way, Some distance west of Canella is Alpha Persei, also in the Milky Way, and about 10° south of it Algol the "demon star," which is remarkably variable in brillinnce, sometimes appearing as bright as the second magnitude, and at other times becomes as faint as a star of the fourth magni-

Venus a Brillinnt Plauet.

Of the planets visible this month, Venus is the most brilliant, having at last emerged from under cover of the sun's rays and wrested the championship from giant Jupi-ter, which has been the reigning prince of the planets for many months. Her stay above the horizon after sunset is yet rather short but it is gradually increasing and the queen of the planets will soon have receded so far from the sun that she will be shining a sparkling diamond in the sky long after twilight has ended. She is now in the constellation Capricornus the Goat.

Jupiter is considerably less brilliant now than he was three months ago, but he is still a very conspicnous object in the even-ing sky. His motion is now direct or easting sky. His motion is now direct or east-erly, and the careful observer may notice from time to time his gradual recession from his last summer's neighbor, the small star Delta Aquarii. He is now in a straight line with the stars Scheat and Markab, the two western stars of the square of Pegasus, before mentioned. The wide gap between Venus and Jupiter is constantly lessening, aithough both planets are moving in the same direction. Venus is moving so much more rapidly than Jupiter that they are now more than a degree closer together each day, and on the 5th of February they will be in conjunction. The approach will be so close that the two objects will with difficulty be distinguished from one, and it will be a fine view.

A Remarkable Conjunction.

Of the remaining planets visible there is not much to be said. Saturn is becoming more brilliant, and now rises before midnight. When at their nearest approach to each other, there will be less than half a inute of arc between them, and, seen with the naked eve, they will appear as one star. A perfective clear atmosphere will be abso-lutely requisite to an observation of the phenomenou, and a small telescope with a magailying power of 10 or 15 will be neces-sary to see it distinctly. The greater the ragnifying power of the telescope, the far-ther asunder will the two objects appear in the field of view, so that a small power is more desirable. The time of geo-centric conjunction in right ascension is 1:56 A. M. January 3, and their positions Mars is scarcely more attractive than he Mars is scarcely more attractive than he was a month ago, and does not rise until nearly 3 o'clock in the morning. Neptune nearly 3 o clock in the morning. Neptune is of interest to those who can avail them-selves of optical aid to bring him into view. He is on the meridian to-night at 10 o'clock and the star Aldebaran will serve as a land-mark by which to find him, the planet be-ing about 4<sup>o</sup> northwest of the star, passing the meridian a little in advance of the latter.
