In June, 1890, the Dunbar Furnace Com pany decided to put down a bore hole. June 16 the hole was 520 feet deep, and Miner John Kerwin was ordered by Superntcodent Lang to break down the two feet remaining between the mine and the hore hole. Kerwin did so, and the water which had accumulated in the hole began rushing out with an odor of escaping gas. Willie Have, a trapper boy, rushed down the slope to warn his father and the other miners, carrying an open light. The gas ignited. In a moment the brattice work caught fire, followed quickly by an explo-sion. The entire slope was a mass of

A year ago the mine was reopened, and since then they have been working steadily.
