

EMIGRATION EVILS.

An English Charity Society Learns Something of Them by Sending Two Commissioners

ON A TOUR THROUGH CANADA.

One of the Ambassadors Finds Everything Lovely and the Other Differs From Him Totally.

THE PESSIMIST AND THE OPTIMIST

Show How People Can See the Same Things in Different Lights.

BY CABLE TO THE DISPATCH. LONDON, Jan. 23.—[Copyright.]—For some years past the Charity Organization Society, in conjunction with the East End Emigration Fund, has been sending out to Canada hundreds of emigrants, but it only recently occurred to the managers of these bodies to find out how the poor people get on in the country of their compulsory adoption.

The officers of the Charity Organization Society happened to be full of overflowing when the happy thought struck its officers, and forthwith Captain Gretton and Mr. T. Gage Gardner were dispatched to Canada as special commissioners, in conformity with the principle that four eyes are better than two.

They spent four or five weeks in Canada, never leaving each other, visiting the same districts and seeing the same people.

This week a special meeting of the Charity Organization Society had the questionable advantage of receiving the special commissioners' reports, which, instead of agreeing with each other as might have been reasonably expected under the circumstances, were utterly and strikingly contradictory.

Knocked the Commissioners Out. The commissioners themselves did not seem to have derived much benefit from their holiday trip, for Mr. Gardner, who put in an appearance, looked anything but "chipper," and Captain Gretton sent a letter stating that he was too unwell to attend.

Apparently Mr. John Martineau, who presided over the meeting, knew of the nature of the reports, and with his countenance beaming with pleasurable anticipations requested that they should be read. Captain Gretton's report came first. It read for him "in his regrettable absence" by Mr. Price, Assistant Secretary of the society, and its delightful description of the idyllic life led by the settlers created a feeling almost of envy in the breasts of the comfortable, well-fed middle-class folks who listened to it, while several elderly sisters present were heard distinctly to sigh.

An Optimist in Canada. Captain Gretton found the society emigrants, with few exceptions, flourishing and thoroughly contented with their country and new life, and full of gratitude for the help which had enabled them to exchange their grinding poverty in England for abundant food, warm houses and excellent clothing, which every sober, healthy industrious settler might confidently hope to possess.

Turning from these glowing generalities the report proceeded to refer to individual cases. Captain Gretton's report was only to be summed, and finally he settled down with a carpenter who, to judge from Captain Gretton's report, occupied himself chiefly in "driving her about in a buggy in summer and sleighing in the winter months."

A Brilliant Prospect to Hold Out. To every British workman, if strong, industrious and sober, the report held out a sure prospect of securing in Canada a position equal to that of the brightest workman of the happy carpenter, while the women might confidently rely upon obtaining husbands at sight. Only a very few were missing the qualifications necessary to succeed in Canada, and even they went to the United States and got rich.

Loud cheers punctuated the report as Mr. Price read it, and there was a rattling of hands and stamping of feet when the Assistant Secretary resumed his seat. Special commissioners were too often expensive luxuries, but in the society's case the members evidently thought the money had been well spent. Then Mr. Gardner rose, and after expressing regret at hearing of Captain Gretton's illness, announced that he was going to talk straight to the members who would have said that gallant officer being present.

Mr. Gardner squared his shoulders and looked across the hall at the organizers, who seemed pained and surprised. They soon had cause for both emotions, for Mr. Gardner effaced Captain Gretton's whitewash with that black paint, laid on with a brush of generous proportions.

"Don't you run away," said he, "with the idea that Canada is a land of milk and honey. It's nothing of the kind. I found many of our emigrants living in miserable and squalid huts, a first-class first-class residence as you would think from the report you have just heard."

Mr. Gardner proceeded to refer to numerous cases of the kind, and to mention other things to the failure of successive wheat harvests, and his most optimistic admission was that people who emigrated to Canada could only hope to live in fair comfort if they were capable of enduring excessive hardships and able to do any kind of work, however hard it might be.

Mr. Gardner's remarks about child emigration were more valuable and are likely to attract a far larger share of public attention than his views in regard to the failure or success of the Charity Organization's emigrants.

A Really Disgraceful System. He declared the system of sending out children to Canada of an abominable and disgraceful nature. Hundreds of girls were sent to homes about which the distributing agents knew practically nothing, and the so-called inspections carried out by the best agencies were delusive. For instance, children sent out by Miss Macpherson's institution were supposed to be visited once every year, but there were 1,000 children registered in the books as being out at homes, and only three inspectors to visit them all.

Mr. Gardner advised people in England to get their facts straight in their own business, and concluded his presidential speech with the dismal remark that his investigations had been thoroughly disheartening.

The Charity Organization Society has not yet decided what to do with the two reports. It is not likely, however, that the general idea being that it is abandoned, the emigration business will be abandoned, the general idea being that the colonies cannot well be given more than a try. But there is a growing feeling, which existed before Mr. Gardner started on his mission, that the system of emigrating girls by charitable societies is attended by fearful evils, and it is not improbable that Parliament may be asked to order a special committee into the subject.

The Latest Express Train Robbery. LAMAR, Mo., Jan. 23.—Two men last night robbed the express car of the Missouri Pacific train which reaches here at 12:30 A. M. The robbers held up the occupants of the car with revolvers while the train traveled the ten miles between Sheldon and Lamar. The men boarded the train at Sheldon. In the baggage and express car were Express Messenger Houck, Baggage-master Hall and Traveling Passenger Agent Barrett. All three were robbed. Houck forced to give the combination of his safe, and this also was robbed. The amount taken from the safe was small.

FIGHT WITH SILVER.

A Bank Hurling Big Round Dollars at an Express Company.

COIN HAULED BY THE CART LOAD

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—A silver war is being waged on Long Island. It is carried on by the Far Rockaway Bank against the Long Island Express Company and the Queens County Bank, in Long Island City. Brand new silver dollars are being used two months. During that time tons of silver dollars have been shipped to and fro between New York and Far Rockaway.

The Queens County Bank is the bank on Long Island, outside of Brooklyn, connected with the New York Clearing House. In consequence a great many checks from New York City on Long Island banks pass through it. Until recently it has been the custom of country banks doing business with each other to pay their accounts with checks deposited with them, receiving in return cashier's checks or checks on banks in New York.

At the Queens County Bank, however, concluded it could make its collections more conveniently and promptly by turning its checks over to the Long Island Express Company for collection, and allowing that company to make the percentage instead of some small bank.

Donald Is a Lot of Silver. Cashier Smith of the Far Rockaway Bank objected to the express company getting the percentages he considered due his bank, and he set about making the company earn its money. He filled the safe of his bank with silver dollars from the Sub-Treasury of this city, under the law the Government issues free to its customers. The morning after the first supply was received an expressman hauled into the bank with a big check to be cashed. Cashier Smith put one of the tellers counting out the amount in silver dollars, one at a time. For more than an hour the expressman stood outside the window watching himself on one leg and then on the other, while he gazed at a big pile of glittering silver dollars which a teller was counting.

Mr. Smith, the cashier of the bank, said last night that the charge he brought against him was the fraudulent conduct of the Candelaria Mines while he was Superintendent.

THE LARGEST AND LEADING MILLINERY HOUSE IN WEST. PENNA.

Sixth St. Penn Ave. Truly, this is the Shopping Mart for the People, the Elegant Emporium of Splendor and Fashion, and All our Magnificent Merchandise at Lower Prices Than "Made to Sell" Kind.

While disclaiming any intention of interfering with the methods others may adopt in conducting their business, still we cannot help thinking, yea, it's a fixed, incontrovertible, unchangeable fact, that our Plain Figure Prices, and one price to all, is the best method that has been introduced so far, and we know that the intelligent community think as we do in this matter.

Our goods are bought at the lowest possible price, in large quantities, always in the best markets, for spot cash. We give no credit, therefore our customers haven't to pay for the bad debts of other people. We add a fair but small profit to first cost and stick to that price religiously. Your little child can buy from us with as much safety as yourself. Now, if we were to deviate in price we'd require to stick a much bigger profit on in case of emergency and "sich." Then you wouldn't know when goods were at right price, anyhow. YES, PLAIN PRICE FIGURES AND ONE PRICE TO ALL IS THE BEST.

WRAP AND WRAPPER TALK, Both Edifying and Profitable for You This Week. Last week we negotiated for and safely landed at our own figures a few more prominent manufacturers' stocks, nice, fresh and fashionable Wraps and Wrappers—needless to say they're marked to sell at prices you could scarcely buy material for. Besides, you'll get a bigger selection than you possibly could in all Western Pennsylvania. Vain assertions profit nothing, but facts are stubborn things. Take elevator to second floor and see these Wrap and Wrapper facts staring you in the face.
