Will Not Ackt

"The Pharisces were open act a had set, far whose work and mission they wholly misconceived. The Pharisees were always prepared to enforce the law at all hazards when it hore heavily on such as differed with the law in its minutia, he never suffered the opportunity to pess unimproved, since his obedience made others feel uncomfortable, and that delighted him immensely. The more absurd the law appeared in his nar-row interpretation of it, the more it annoved and oppressed others, the more zealous he was about its observance. Two motives seemed to dominate his mind in all that he lid, and these the Master plainly pointed out: the ambition to lord it over others and the desire to impress them with his superior sanctity. As a result of their course of conduct, Christ also indicated, they shut up the kingdom of heaven against others, and themselves refused to enter.

Only to Be Seen of Men

"The text is a plain, unvarnished picture of the Pharisee as he flourished in Christ's day, though it is by no means a flattering one nor such as any one in this nineteenth century would like to have fixed upon them. They bind heavy burdens and grievous to borne, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.' Their purpose in all this was uncovered in these expressive words of Christ: 'All their works they do to be seen of men.' A religion of that particu-Inr type, though rare in these days, is yet occasionally to be encountered.

"One of the singular phenomena of the working out of that old Pharisaic spirit has invariably been a reaction such as has caused the friends of truth and justice to make deplore the results. The Reformation of the sixteenth century was a noble victory for the rights of conscience against the trannical encroachments of Phariseeism. Grand as were the results of that reforma-tion there were yet evils flowing from it which were greatly to be regretted, a spirit of insubordination to all ecclesiastical authority, a liberalism which developed in its time into rank skepticism. The same was observed in the French Revolution, when the people undertook to throw off the irksome restraints of the effete monarchy; the issue was the 'Reign of Terrors, with its never to be forgotten horrors. The Puritans of England were another case in point.

Brought on a Reign of Evil,

"They started out to redress the wrongs had been nurtured in the corrupt court of Great Britain. With the law mak-ing power at last in their hands they pro-ceeded to enact laws against every sin in the calendar, and attached to them penalties of the most dire character. By the time the Puritans got this far, the people began to rebel, and the final outcome of the struggle was the annuling not alone of the op-pressive laws which those fanatics had passed, but the entire abrogation of good and wholesome laws by which the evil passions of men were held in check. In th early days of the colonies the Puritanic spirit 'displayed itself in the enactment of laws of the most oppressive character, laws which bound the consciences of men and robbed them of inalienable rights bestowed upon them by the great Creator. What followed? That which always follows the unrestrained exercise of the old Pharisaic spirit, a reaction issuing in antinomianism and open licentiousness.

"The are which succeeded that which burned witches and put men in the stocks for not going to church on the Lord's Day was one in which infidelity and all manner of lawlessness flourished as they had never done before nor since in this country. Doubtless General Grant was right when he declared that the speediest way to secure the repeal of an obnoxious law lay in its rigid enforcements but it is also true that the harsh enforcement of even good laws, under radically different circumstances from what was originally contemplated in their enactment, generally results in a reaction that will sweep such laws and many other good and wholesome ones from the statute ooks of the nation.

Laws Can't Last Forever.

Study the Bible from beginning to end with a particular regard to the question of yard, legislation; then read profane history with

All nature is a picture gallery of wonders, the study of which enriches man. Nature does everything in her power to make man stop and consider. Man himself, as fear-fully and wonderfully made, is as much a source of wonder to the student of to-day as he was to the philosopher of ancient times. "But what are all the wonders of the material universe and the wouders of man compared with the more sublime wonders of redemption and providence? These are the wonders that the angels desire us to lo into. As the horizon of one's vision broadens the wonders multiply. Wonders lead to faith. We become conscious of the presence of some power or invisible Being who disturbs our spiritual slumber and awakens us to new life. When by faith we lay hold upon the eternal One and through Him eternal things, we are not to expect that wonders will cease."

papers and Labor Organization Rev. J. F. McCrory, of the L. & O. triumvirate, announced for his subject at the Third United Presbyterian Church, Diamond street, last evening, "Who is the newsboy's friend-Sunday papers or the laws of Pennsylvania and the Christian people?" His discourse was the usual violent tirade against the Sunday press. As a variation, however, he denounced the labor organizations for passing resolutions against the attempt to take from them their mental food on the seventh day.

The reporter noticed there were no newsboys present and made some inquiries in regard to that fact. The only person who could give any information was the janitor, who said the newsboys used to attend, but made so much noise and abused the furni-ture so much that their presence was not greatly desired any more.
