But That Seems to Bave Little Effect on the Ex-Speaker. SENATOR STANFORD'S SILVER SCHEME

WASHINGTON, March 4.-Greek met Greek in the House to-day, and for the brief space of five minutes a parliamentary colloquy was witnessed which, in aptness of retort, has had no precedent in the present session. On the one side was Speaker Crisp, who stands as the sponsor of the rules of the Fifty-second Congress, and on the other was ex-Speaker Reed, the defender of the rules and methods of the Pitty-first Congress. He believed that the Constitution of the United States intended that inspection and quarantine laws should be in the hands of the States. The pending measure was one of that brood of bills that grew out of the feeling of paternalism which was spreading over the country. The people of the United States were being taught, instead of going to their State authorities, to go to Congress for everything, from a million acres of land to a paper of pins. The States were slowly (no, not slowly, but rapidly) having their constitutional power taken away from them, and power was being vested in Congress to-day which had been intended by the framers of the Constitution to be left to the States exclusively. He was proud to say that he believed in the Constition as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and did not believe in such legislation as was proposed in the pending measure. He believed that that measure was a prostitution of the commerce clause of the Constitution in regard to the exercise of the police powers of the State, and for that reason he would cheerfully cast his vote against it. his vote against it. Paddock Defends the Measure.

Mr. Paddock denied the statement made several days ago that the bill was aimed particularly at the cottonseed oil interest. He defied anyone to point to one provision, line or word in the bill that discriminated against any honest and honestly branded against any nonest and nonestly branded article of food in favor of any other such article. As to the extravagant criticism that the bill would be used for imaginary political purposes, it was a serious matter, political purposes, it was a serious matter, he said, to charge even directly that those who were engaged in the formulation and presentation of the bill, and the great body of the people who honestly demanded its passage, were moved chiefly by a desire to inaugurate a cheap, nasty, political scheme for partisan uses. If the bill were of the character described, all who were instrumental in promoting it must have been moved by partisan motives. Such was the logical conclusion of the as-have been moved by partisan motives. Such was the logical conclusion of the assertion. No other was possible. It was a reflection, therefore, on State legislatures, boards of trade, great commercial associations, farmers' alliances, granges, the great army of reputable manufacturers and dealers, and the thousands of other honored itizens all over the country who had indorsed the measure and agreed to its pas-sage. That was not the kind of argument sage. That was not the kind of argument which would satisfy the country that the Senators who made it were themselves moved by other than political or selfish motives. In conclusion he appealed to Senators to help enact the bill into law.

Eulogies were then delivered in respect to the memory of the late Representative Lee, of Virginia, and the Senate adjourned till Monday.

The Most Reverend Archbishop of New York and other prelates, with distinguished laymen, have made the request that the Archbishops and Bishops be addressed with a view to the taking of some concerted action in the matter, so that on the day mentioned in all the dioceses special religious services be held. It has also been thought that these might be supplemented, wherever practicable, by some civil celebration in the evening.
