NEW ADVERTISEMENTS

For the Iron and Steel Industry in the Busy Furnace Valley.

MANY SIGNS OF DEPRESSION.

The Present State of Affairs Due Solely to Overproduction.

FIRST STEPS TAKEN TO CURTAIL IT

PECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCHA NEW CASTLE, PA., March 10 .- It is common knowledge that at present every branch of the iron and steel trades is under going the most severe case of industrial paralysis it has ever been the misfortune of these industries to suffer. From the blast furnace industry down to the stage of final completion dullness and depression in a more or less aggravated degree afflict these sister industries. This deplorable condition has remained so long, and at present is evidencing not the remotest sign of a partial cossation, that there is now heard a faint sound of despair echoing through these naturally blessed districts. A dark cloud of inactivity and industrial distress is surely beginning to settle upon the iron-making distriets of Western Pennsylvania. During a period of but very ordinary activity in the the busiest spots in Western Pennsylvania, because of the many natural advantages it possesses for the economical production and its availability to advantageously market either raw or finished iron or steel. It enjoys the identical advantages of the Pitts-burg district, and of course these are unexceptional. Therefore, when one sees on every hand evident signs of idleness, and continually hears stories of depression, it is natural to infer that the causes therefor are not of local origin.

The first intimation I received of this condition of the iron and steel trades hereabouts was a sight which I consider a very fit precursor of the unfavorable news that I have since learned. Along the line of the Pittsburg and Western Railway for distance of three miles I noticed an unbroken line of empty ore cars. The rusty condition of their running gear and general shandoned air well indicated that they are not being used-for the reason that there is nothing for them to do. This fact was commented upon by a milroad official here. It is his opinion that the traffic business of the Shenango Valley was never in his experience so limited and curtailed, and the outlook he thought was serious enough to demand the immediate consideration of the various industries affected, with a view to making some provision to counteract the abnormal depression settling over the Few of the Works Running Full.

None of the local industrial establishments are running full. Mill and furnace owners wear an air of indifference, and seem willing to accept with good philosophy the inevitable result of either total or partial stoppage of operations. At the Ætna Mill of P. L. Kimberly & Co. one of the two stacks is in operation, which condition with them is rendered possible from the fact that the product of the stack finds an easy field of consumption in their adjoining rolling mill. This latter is not very busy, and a loud wail went forth from this quarter against the unsatisfactory level at which prices for finished shapes are ruling. At Johnson's Arthusia Mill I found the plant employed to a fair degree of activity, but from the tone of the conversation of one of the minor officials they evidently do not expect to be always so comparatively fortunate. The Crawford Iron and Steel Company's Red Jacket plant is in steady operation, due to the fact that one of the associated firms is using the product of the furnace. This furnace plant is controlled by the New Castle Wire Nail Company, which latter concern is erecting a very large mill adjoining their wire mill, to be used for the making of steel billets to supply concern stated that trade was indeed 'rocky" at present, and from all sources he was led to place little confidence in the im-

At Ramey & Berger's furnace plant a very considerable quantity of foundry iron remains on hand, and while the stack is still operating I was informed that the firm contemplates, in fact has decided, to close down in about two weeks. This contem-plated action is a sufficient evidence of the condition of things with this firm. One of the members spoke at length on the un-tavorable conditions on account of the prescat enormous production of iron, the limited consumption, the activity of Southern for-nace companies in selling in Northern mar-kets, and above all the entire and complete absence of any demand for foundry irons at any reasonable price.

One Active Furnace Firm. At the Rosina Furnace of the Oliver Iron and Steel Company the plant is actively engaged in turning out mill iron, but it seems that here, too, some mitigating circumstances surround the mystery of their unusual activity. I was informed that the plant is the property of the Ward estate end has for some time been operated under a lease which will expire April 1. It was further stated that it is the intention of the lessees to yield up possession then, as they find they are able to buy mill iron cheaper delivered at their Woods' Run, Pittsburg, mill, where the production of this plant finds an outlet cheaper than it can be made for here. There is an enormous quantity of iron in the yards of this furnace, the amount running up into the thousands of tans. When it is considered that very little iron is being shipped away, but all being piled up, probably the reason for the unusual sight of a blast furnace in active operation at the present time can be ac-

On inquiring into the cause or causes of this unprecedented depression, the consensus of opinion seems to lay it at the door of the great evil of any industry—overproduction. There are many who venture additional reasons, such as the activity of the South in the blast furnace industry and its consequent competition with Northern makers, the gradual substitution of the universal use of steel for iron, restricted consumption and the dullness of general trade. But by following the causes of these lesser evils back to their beginning it will be clearly found that they are only the offspring of the present evil—overproduction. This one word covers the multitude of miseries that now embrace the iron and steel trade.

Paying the Penalty of Error. At the close of 1889 it is estimated that the blast furnace industry had over-reached itself to the extent of 15 per cent, or, in other words, the production then ex-ceeded consumption to this extent. Now it ceeded consumption to this extent. Now it is estimated that the annual consumption of the country increases each year about 10 per cent over the former year, so that when the United States exceeded England in the production of pig iron during 1890, it at the same time surpassed its ordinary increase about 10 per cent, thus doubling the overwrought condition previously existing, and for which violation of the greatest natural law of trade—the equanimity between supply and demand—it is now paying a double penalty.

There is not one who takes a hopeful view supply and demand—it is now paying a double penalty.

There is not one who takes a hopeful view of the immediate situation, for general confidence has been rudely shattered. Every outside influence portended good for the iron trade for the year of 1892. The crop returns were the largest in the country's history; railroad earnings were the largest known; financial ensiness prevailed everywhere; the large increase in exports and returning flow of gold, promised activity in railroad construction and equipment and in the volume of building. If sentiment controlled the doings of the markets our prosperity would be long lasting. But while the trade was cherishing the most flattering hopes for the future the chimera was gnawhopes for the future the chimera was gnawing at the very foundations of future prosperity. It lured producers on to greater efforts and a glutted market is the result.

Makera do not seem discouraged by the enormous stocks piling up all around them, and aside from the absence of need of re-pairs or financial distress there is only one method that can force them into a state of inactivity. This is an unprofitable busi-ness, the direct result of bitter competition. The Southern pig iron producer is a stayer. It is a question now whether more Northern furnaces will go out of blast than Southern in the commercial war now being waged to restrict overproduction. Time waged to restrict overproductions alone will tell.

Meantime the fact that furnaces are going out of blast is the first hopeful sign.

Those who know assert that the continuation of this compulsory policy is the only method that will restore the iron industry to its former greatness.
