The hearing in the contest of the will of the late Anna Keitz was concluded before Judge Over. A number of witnesses testified that Mrs. Keitz understood her and that she knew the contents of the will. The Rev. Nicholas Soergel, who wrote the will, testified that he had used no undue inwill, testified that he had used no undue influence. He had tried to induce her to give something to her sister, the contestant, but when she would not, he advised her to give him less and more to charities. Upon this she increased some of the charitable bequests, making the residue of the estate for the Rev. Mr. Soergel, considerably less.

When the hearing was concluded the court took the papers and reserved a decision.

A Titled Aristocracy.

An Englishman, visiting a gentleman in this city, said he had noted the lack of titled noblity in American society. The nearest approach to noblity he had found was "Camellia," the Queen of Flour. "It seems to ne," said he, "that every lady in this State must do homage to her, for whonever I sit down to dinner about the first thing I hear is that the deliciously light and white bread before me is made from Camellia." His hostess reminded him that Americans recognized no queen but this queen of the kitchen, who had always proven their best servant instead of their tyrant. Give her a trial.

The Academy of Music. Sam Devere has a good variety company and a crowded house at the Academy last evening testified to this fact. Everybody was pleased from start to finish of the performance, and every artist did her or his part very well indeed. It is a return visit of the company, and their enthusiastic re-ception last evening was very flattering to them.

As society sketch artists, McAvoy and Rogers are good and above the average. Harding and Ah Sid, "the clown and the Chinaman," are highly amusing, and the Nelson sisters are just as entertaining as any two female variety performers can be. Rowe and Rentz and Ryan and Richfield are Rowe and Rentz and Ryan and Richfield are worth seeing. The two last named have a very clever new act named "444." A troupe of eight Japanese performed some remarkable juggling feats. One of their number did a rope trick that was really wonderful. He walked up a rope stretched from the stage to the top gallery, and slid down on his feet. Of course the "whistling coon" was there, just as happy and jolly as ever, with his banjo.
