

PEACE AND HARMONY

After All Settle Down on the Two Belliouse Factions in Ohio.

THE DELEGATION WAS DIVIDED, Sherman Having Two Friends and Foraker the Same Number.

THE TOMAHAWK BURIED ONCE MORE

CLEVELAND, O., April 28.—Pierr, white-haired General W. H. Gibson, of Tiffin, impersonated the archangel of peace at the Republican Convention to-day. He declared that he would nominate a slate without regard to either side. He would himself withdraw, and unless prevented by what would amount to an act of Providence or the powers infernal, would move that all four delegates at large to Minneapolis be nominated by acclamation, and that they be McKinley Foraker, Bushnell and Hahn, two unmistakable Sherman and two easily recognized Foraker men. As a result of this bold move no fight was made on the permanent organization, and Governor McKinley made his appearance and went to the chair amid a tremendous outburst of applause and waving of hats and handkerchiefs.

Notwithstanding that he had been up to date at the American Club gathering in Pittsburgh, and had traveled extensively until almost the time he stepped upon the platform, Governor McKinley's magnificent vitality seemed unflagging, and he seemed calm, foreful and ready for any emergency as he stepped to the front of the stage, and, gazing an instant at the wildly cheering mass of people before him, began his speech.

"Never Better Prepared for Battle," The Ohio Republican State Convention, he began, in such full-throated earnestness that it brought the great crowd instantly to a halt. He was in the habit of organizing for the victory of 1892. This, our opening of the campaign, must result in our triumph for the Republican party in the nation. We were never, I am proud to say, in better condition for battle, and a reference to the administration of President Harrison brought out hearty cheers, succeeded a few minutes later by an extraordinary hurrah that shook the roof when the speaker gave utterance to the name of Secretary Blaine. The mention of Ohio's son, Secretary of the Treasury Foster, by Governor McKinley, was also well received. He continued, spiritedly:

"We love our leaders, but we love our cause and our country better than all of them. With us it is no longer a question of compromise. We stand where we stand always and the friends of America against all the world. And we need not be alarmed as to the outcome. We are here to stay. We were in 1880. It was then too young to speak for itself. It is now 12 months old. It is now talking. (Great cheering and laughter.) The tariff system that we uphold is the American system, and it is right. It is right by its own merits. It is right by the fact that it has increased the foreign and domestic trade of the United States to a total of $2,000,000,000 in one year—a point never reached before since the foundation of the American Government. (Tremendous cheering.)"

Talked Himself Out in Pittsburgh. Gentlemen, I closed one speech in Pittsburgh at 10 o'clock this morning, and now wish to stop a little short (cries of "Go on!"), giving you the greetings of the Republicans of Pennsylvania, with their promise to roll up a majority of 60,000 in November for the Republican national ticket. Now, whatever else happens here to-day, let us have harmony, unity and fraternity, and when we go out of this convention, whether I have had any way you have had yours, let the voice of this convention be the law of the Republican action. (Applause.)

As if sped from a rifle barrel the report of the Committee on Rules and Order of Business, which was expected to be the signal for the opening of the conflict between the Sherman and Foraker factions, went through the convention unanimously, absolutely without a syllable of friction. Now came the platform, and it, too, shot straight across the platform to the mark of perfect unanimity. Not a single "No" was voiced, and the lightning-like quality of the platform being adopted before the orators could rub their eyes.

The Points of the Platform. The platform, without qualification, indorses and commends the Harrison administration; a "just pride" is taken in McKinley and his administration; protection is adhered to; reciprocity is specially mentioned; the Springer free trade policy is denounced; free coinage is also denounced; just and liberal pensions demanded for every soldier and sailor who fought for the Union, and the repeal of existing immigration laws is asked.

A whole Niagara of harmony was let loose in the first nominating speech, when a Sherman man, John R. Loch, putting forward a Sherman ticket, was elected by the head of the State ticket, elected almost lovingly for three seconds on the "viva, vigor and victory of peerless Foraker." The convention here was nearly drowned in the ensuing torrent of enthusiasm. For Secretary of State besides Taylor, the Sherman candidate, Wyduan (Foraker) and Chesler (independent, with Foraker leanings) were named. The voting here has been in progress when it was seen Taylor would have a majority, and changes to Taylor began to be announced from the ballots at first cast for other two candidates. The result was as follows: Taylor, 4207; Wyduan, 188; Chesler, 1475. Taylor's selection was made unanimous. Judge William T. Spear was unopposed as his own successor for one of the two Supreme Court Judgeships.

The Compromise Slate a Go. Long before this point of the proceedings had been reached it was generally current that the Sherman leaders had at the last moment gracefully accepted of the unshakable proposal of Foraker's friend, General Gibson, and that the delegates at large would be evenly divided between the two sections—McKinley, Foraker, Hahn and Bushnell. The first and third were classed as Sherman men, while the second and fourth were thoroughly representative of the other wing of the party in Ohio. All four, while perhaps not in some contingencies strictly speaking Harrison champions, have from the first been acceptable to the President's friends.

Ex-Governor Foraker, meantime, had modestly entered at a side door and seated himself unobserved back of the Chairman's desk, to witness the full ratification of the treaty. It was a picturesque spectacle to see Senator Sherman's trusted lieutenant, Mark Hanna, in the next chair to ex-Governor Foraker, the two complacent and innocent looking as twin lambs. Judge J. F. Burkett was nominated for the Supreme Court Judgeship by acclamation. Captain Joseph B. Allen of Stark county, a one-armed veteran, was named for Supreme Court clerk, also by acclamation. E. F. Lybarger was selected as the candidate for member of the Board of Public Works.

A Funny Part of the Work. A huge guffaw was elicited when the elected spokesman for Chris Engel, Walter C. Ong, of Cleveland, declared that Engel had been "born in Germany at the age of 20 years." Even Governor McKinley's classic features relaxed when it turned out the real idea was Mr. Engel came to this country at the age of 20, and that his natal day had taken place a long time beforehand. Now came the most thrilling scene in the proceedings. White-haired, but hale and ruddy old General W. H. Gibson came forward to name the great quartet who had been agreed to represent Ohio in the Naional Council at Minneapolis. Trembling with emotion, he shouted:

As the o'-de-Republican on this floor, and being in this convention in the interest of no man, I want the privilege of naming to this convention the "big four" to Minneapolis. I am a Republican, heart and soul, and when every man that has been mentioned in this convention shall be mentioned in dust that party will still be living in its immortal principles. I promise you that I am as loyal to do as I say as I am to me, Ohio shall be, as she should be, first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of the people. First, I want to name our own peerless Governor McKinley. (Immense cheering.) Next, who could not be terrorized by earthquakes nor stamped by floods—by a Forker, imperial in his magnificence, Joseph B. Foraker.

A Colossal Hurrah for Harmony. It seemed as though the sky would crack before the convention could be brought to order, so instant and extraordinary in volume was the colossal hurrah that went up from every nook and corner of the hall. The names of the two remaining proposed committee delegates at large, Hahn and Bushnell, were scarcely heard in the tumult. The cheering, assenting with voices and arms till they grew black in the face. Ex-Governor Foraker's appearance now alongside of Chairman McKinley and General Gibson completed the drama and the cheering. When after an ovation lasting nearly five minutes, his voice could be heard, he said:

We are Republicans, and Republicans only. We came here determined to have harmony and unity of action, even if we had to fight for it. We have secured it, and we have secured it without any fighting among ourselves. The selected candidates on our ticket are ones with which all should be proud to present their names, and can support zealously. From this day let every Republican have his gun pointed at the common enemy. At Minneapolis we shall strive for a result as harmonious as here. I don't know whether the nominee will be McKinley or Foraker, but in any event we in Ohio will be prepared to take off our coats and work for the success of the whole ticket.

A HOUSE PARTIALLY WRECKED.

One of Its Walls Falls, But No One Is Hurt. James McClurg is building a big cracker factory on the site of the old Booth Brewery, on Rebecca street. Yesterday the workmen were excavating for the foundation. In some way they got close to the house of Mr. Ellen Reed, whose property adjoins that of McClurg, and a part of the brick wall of her house fell down. The persons in the house were not injured. The wall of the house was so badly shattered it will have to be torn down.
