

presumably come from Chicago. From that city Dr. Teed, with 25 of his recently acquired angels, had disappeared. Dr. Teed appeared as completely as though his headdress had become as visionary in reality as it seems to be to the average ordinary mortal who is not among the elect of the blessed and had faded away. It may be that the contingent has done a more practical thing and Dr. Teed will eventually bob up serenely with his numerous families in Economy above down here, only blessings on the peace-loving, economical German out at the quiet little village by his divine presence and incidentally to enjoy the blessings of the fruits of the backs the frugal Economites have stowed away.

The circumstances attending Dr. Teed's disappearance are interesting to say the least. He returned to his home in Chicago called the College of Life or Heaven, which was crowded with a throng of local angels. Dr. Teed also brought back a number of most fascinating wealthy members from the great city of Washington Heights. Dr. Teed called the California contingents his angels just the same as he called his local followers. But Dr. Teed realized there might accidentally be something very like unbecomingly lying about the fact that his angels and local angels, if they were all crowded into the little College of Life.

Starting a Second Heaven. Consequently he exercised his divine brain and concluded that the two bands of angels would get along there better if there was a division, as distance lends enchantment in Cyrus' heaven as it does in the more prosaic earth. Therefore the more Cyrus looked about him and decided upon starting a heaven No. 2, and for that purpose purchased, with his California angels' money, a nice little rural heaven in a picturesque suburb of Chicago, in Washington Heights. There he sounded his mighty voice in the ears of his angels and a flutter of excitement passed through the Chicago heaven. It was different at Washington Heights and there, but it was a different kind. It was a flutter of indignation. The residents of Washington Heights are aristocratic and exclusive. They objected to the flitting about of angels and also to the embarrassing presence of Mr. Messiah Doctor Cyrus Teed.

There is a well developed belief among the people of Washington Heights that Cyrus is only a man and that his claims to be a divine origin are not in strict accordance with the truth, but Cyrus and his angels say these malizans are envious and jealous because they have no hands in his work. However that may be, times, Dr. Teed and his angels will tell.

The male population of Washington Heights were not the objectors. It was the fair sex. The California contingent was made up of 25 alluring, charming and light-hearted beauties, with a wealth of soft, silken tresses, languishing dark eyes, sylph-like forms, queenly carriages and other attributes that stir the mortal mind to the contemplation of various acts and stir the aforesaid certain males' better half into other rash acts. But Dr. Teed cared not for these remarks, for he smiled serenely and went to work.

Second Heaven for Angels. He told his California angels they could revel in his delightful company in Washington Heights and incidentally could cook and sweep and darn stockings and wash dishes and do all the other household and garden and hoe potatoes and milk cows and do other delightful little things that go to make a country heaven so alluring. And the angels were glad. All this Dr. Teed and his angels will tell.

Whether he really did, and they could really do, was altogether a different matter. Councils turned the letter down on the ground that the charter did not require the Mayor's approval of contracts, claiming that if he had the approval of them it would be virtually giving him the power to let contracts. Against this reasoning the Mayor and Controller argue that all laws contemplate the Mayor's right to officially approve or disapprove the acts of Councils, whether they be ordinances, resolutions or contracts, and that while the section of the charter act may not specify his approval of contracts it is understood and legally required. The Controller declares his intention to fight this point to the courts, though he expects to make it interesting for the opposition before the matter gets that far by referring to recognize any contracts not signed by the Mayor, and refusing to draw warrants to pay for work done or materials furnished under them. When this question will be settled can only be conjectured.

Backing Up Against the State. The third fight on the Controller's list is with the State Department at Harrisburg and is over the issue of interest on the city's bonds. Under acts of the Legislature all the various issues of Pittsburgh's bonds are exempt from taxation, but the present administration has signified its intention to disregard the exemption and compel the city to pay. The same question was raised six or seven years ago, but the Controller fought it out and won. He expects to repeat the performance this time, though a settlement of the question cannot be had until next October, when the attempt to collect will be made.

The ordinance presented in Councils recently and opposed by all the other officials, is advocated by the Controller and he is making, or intends to make, a fight for it. He refuses to discuss the matter, however, and only an explanation he makes for his attitude is that while the ordinance as presented is not perfect, it is a step in the right direction, and could easily be amended to make it perfect if Councils so desired. What steps he proposes to take in this matter he declines to say.

SIX FIGHTS ON HAND, Controller Morrow Is Waging Warfare in a Quiet but Determined Manner.

A LIVELY TIME PROMISED To Those Gentlemen Who Oppose His Ideas of What Is Right.

CITY OFFICIALS AGAINST HIM. A Pretty Dispute With the State Treasurer Over Taxes.

OPPOSED TO THE GARBAGE ORDINANCE. Controller Morrow is just now experiencing much unrest of mind over a number of differences he has with other officials at City Hall and elsewhere.

Asked to explain, he declined to discuss or enter into details on his coming battles, and his listeners were left to guess them out as best they could. The first correct guess made was the fight between the Controller and the department chiefs over the use of electricity in the public buildings. The Controller stands entirely alone in his opposition to electricity, even the clerks in his own office being on the other side. The details of this controversy have been repeatedly discussed in print.

Has a Desire to Save Money. The Controller, while admitting that gas is inferior to electric light, insists that as the Pittsburgh Gas Company is bound to furnish 12,000,000 cubic feet of gas free to the city each year it should be taken advantage of and used, thereby saving $1,250 for the city. The other officials maintain that the discomfort and dirt caused by the gas more than offsets the saving that would come from using it, and that since the free gas would not be sufficient to furnish one-third the light necessary the saving would be a trifle after all. This fight will be settled within the next 30 days.

Fight No. 2 is that over the approval of contracts by the Mayor, upon which the Mayor and Controller stand together, though the latter says he intends to conduct himself henceforth and will carry it into court if need be, where he says he is sure to win. The subject was introduced by the Mayor at the last session of Councils in a letter, advising that in order to avoid any question of legality of contracts entered into by the chiefs of departments, they should be submitted for his approval and signature.

Turned Down by City Councils. Councils turned the letter down on the ground that the charter did not require the Mayor's approval of contracts, claiming that if he had the approval of them it would be virtually giving him the power to let contracts. Against this reasoning the Mayor and Controller argue that all laws contemplate the Mayor's right to officially approve or disapprove the acts of Councils, whether they be ordinances, resolutions or contracts, and that while the section of the charter act may not specify his approval of contracts it is understood and legally required. The Controller declares his intention to fight this point to the courts, though he expects to make it interesting for the opposition before the matter gets that far by referring to recognize any contracts not signed by the Mayor, and refusing to draw warrants to pay for work done or materials furnished under them. When this question will be settled can only be conjectured.

What steps he proposes to take in this matter he declines to say.

Another dispute in which the Controller is interested is the granting of a portion of McKee place in the Fourth ward. McKee place is the name applied to the street which has been partially opened, but the dispute arises over its continuation. It had been proposed to make Ward street a part of it, but property holders in another street secured the opening of another street which eventually became part of McKee place. Those interested on Ward street are bitterly opposed to the change of plans, as McKee place is the most important street and it would have benefited their property and have become a part of it. The Controller declines to state his position in this matter, and as the City Attorney, who is on the other side, is equally reticent, but little could be learned, though the Controller was in an indignant frame of mind over it last night.

Eight No. 6 is against the street railways. As has been frequently stated, street railways only yielded $200 to the City Treasury last year and but little more the year before. There are but three street railways in the city liable to taxation, and even they have failed to pay their assessments properly for several years. The Controller will go to court directly in an effort to collect the back assessments, and he has plans laid for following up the advantage he expects to gain by winning the preliminary suits which will benefit the City Treasury considerably. The Controller last night declined to talk for publication on any of his "fights," but promised that when the proper time came he would furnish some interesting reading matter for the public.

A MODERN NOAH. Michael Gallagher, of Lawrenceville, Hunting for His Sister Julia to Save Her From the Approaching Deluge of Fire and Brimstone.

Michael Gallagher, originally of Swinford, County Mayo, Ireland, later of California, and at present of Lawrenceville, wants to find his sister Julia, who, when last heard from, was employed at the Central Hotel. Mr. Gallagher is depressed. In the first place he is sad because he cannot find his sister, and in the next place he asserts with positiveness that there is going to be a considerable trouble in this world within a very short time. At his first story suggested plot to depress Pittsburgh really, but one glance at the gentleman dispelled the idea, as his appearance denoted that he had been industriously acquiring real estate during his brief stay in this city.

Mr. Gallagher announced that some 30 years ago his father was a king or queen, a crown, signifying that the child would in course of time become a king or queen. Mr. Gallagher finds that the signs are not propitious for the creation of a new king, but is confident that the child (who is probably himself, although his modesty prevents his admitting it) was born to great things. Upon the proposition Mr. Gallagher has insisted that within a short time the earth, with the exception of one spot, yet to be announced, will be deluged by waves of flames and torrents of liquid brimstone. He expects that the flood of this second deluge, and will pilot a small but devoted band of relatives and followers, numbered at 200, to the haven of safety.

For this purpose, he states, he and his friends are interested in a goodly tract of earth to Swinford, County Mayo. With the natural affection of a brother, Mr. Gallagher desires to save his sister, who is in ignorance of the trouble in store for her unless she hastens to Swinford in time to receive her marching orders. He holds that his sister is being concealed by enemies who believe he has informed the English Government that the people of this country are wretched and ignorant and employed in creating wars. Mr. Gallagher denies this charge, and announces that he will to-day apply to the Governor for a search warrant which will enable him to find his sister.

MEMORIAL OF THE FLOOD. The Johnstown Commission to Make Its Final Report in a Few Days—Accounting for Every Cent Received—Dedication of the Hospital.

The Johnstown Flood Commission will hold its final meeting in Philadelphia next Tuesday. The commission will then dissolve, it having performed all the work for which it was appointed. The commission is composed of ex-Governor James A. Beaver, Chairman; R. M. Ogden, ex-Mayor; Filler and Francis B. Reeves, of Philadelphia; Judge Cummings, of Williamsport; and S. S. Marvin, Reuben Miller and James B. Scott, of Pittsburgh. Two members of the commission as originally constituted will not attend the final meeting. Judge Cummings is dead, and Francis B. Reeves, as Chairman of Philadelphia's Relief Committee has gone to Russia with his city's contribution to the suffering of that country. All the Pittsburgh members of the commission it is expected will attend Tuesday's meeting and James B. Scott will read his report on the construction of the Memorial Hospital at Johnstown.

The report reviews the work of the Hospital Commission at length. It describes the building minutely and gives a detailed account of every cent expended on the building, which report shows that $35,000 was originally set apart by the General Flood Commission for the hospital. The interest on this deposit amounted to $1,725.52, giving to the Hospital Board a total of $36,725.52 with which to begin work. The ground upon which the hospital is constructed cost $5,800. The cost of the building, equipment and furnishings, including every detail, was $36,725.52. After the hospital was completed and completed the trustees of the concern were estimated with $128 25, the balance of the general fund, giving to the stricken city not only the hospital equipped in detail, but a reserve fund which will run the hospital.

While the Flood Commission will dissolve after Tuesday's meeting, it will meet at Johnstown on May 31, the anniversary of the disaster, and will take part in the ceremonies attendant upon the dedication of the monument erected to the memory of the 750 unknown dead.

The history of the Johnstown Flood Commission is the history of the greatest disaster of the century. During the entire year the commission expended over $3,000,000, representing the State's appropriation and the charities of the civilized world. The commission's work has been included for nearly a year, but the dissolution has been unavoidably delayed.

FATAL AND SEVERE ACCIDENTS. Fireman John Killed in a Panhandle Tunnel Near Morgantown. Yesterday a number of accidents of various kinds occurred in the two cities. A fireman was killed in a wreck, an old lady drank drugged poison by mistake, and a mother gave her baby laudanum, thinking it was paracetamol. The list follows: JOHN—George Johns, a fireman on the Panhandle, was killed yesterday. As a locomotive was emerging from a tunnel near Morgantown, the smoke stack was torn off and struck the engine. Johns was so badly injured that he died soon afterwards. HASTINGS—Patrick Hastings fell from a Birmingham car at the corner of South Twenty-second and Erie streets last night, and severely injured his head. He was removed to his home at 74 South Eighth street.

CAHILL—Alfred Cahill, of the Eighth ward, was injured last night by falling from a flight of stairs in the rear of his office. His right shoulder was badly injured and his leg fractured. He was taken to the hospital for treatment.

POSTER—Bratton Postor, an employe at the Lucy Furnaces, had both feet badly burned yesterday. He was taken to the hospital for treatment.

SHAW—David Shaw, who runs a saloon in the city, was seriously injured yesterday. While riding the animal, it was frightened as a cabby, and he was thrown off and slipped and fell on the rider. The horse kicked Mr. Shaw on the head in getting out of the stable.

BLICK—Mrs. C. M. Hicks, of Sharpburg, gave birth to a child last night. The child was in mistake for paracetamol. The child is not expected to live.

TWO NERVY OIL MEN. Lewis Robb Squeezes Down a Tight Hole for Eighty-Five Feet TO RECOVER A SPUDDING BIT. A Well Shooter Saves His Life by Exercising His Nerve. STANDING OFF DEATH WITH ONE HAND.

The most remarkable feat ever attempted in the oil regions was successfully accomplished at Nobletown yesterday. Lewis Robb, a slender young tool dresser, who has as much nerve as muscle, went down in an oil well 85 feet and hatched a chain to a spudding bit. The well belongs to Marshall, Kennedy & Co. of Allegheny, and it is known as their No. 1 Sudekum. Smith Bros. are the contractors who are drilling the well. When the well reached a depth of 85 feet, the spudding bit, which is 15 inches wide across the bottom, 2 1/2 feet high, and 4 inches across the top, became loosened from the long iron to which it was attached. They fished for several days without being able to dislodge it from the bottom. Some one jokingly suggested that Robb ought to go down after it. He took the proposition seriously and said he was willing to undertake the perilous job.

A Tight Squeeze for Robb. The conductor box was pulled out, and by several measurements the drillers found that the 15-inch bit made about a 16-inch circular hole, as it was being turned and twisted in the drilling. There was a possibility that the air in the hole might be bad, and to find out whether such was the case they let down lanterns and candles, but the air was found to be pure.

Robb was then tied in a rope harness made of the same kind as the other drillers and was carefully lowered by them into the hole. He was soon out of sight to his friends in the derrick, but called up that he could see everything around him. When he went down he carried a chain over his shoulder to which the cable or rope of the drilling was fastened. On reaching the bottom of the hole he found that it was filled up over the top of the bit with water. It was as cold as a miser's smile, but Robb dropped into it, and soon had the chain fastened around the head of the bit. He then signaled to be pulled up, and soon after he reached the derrick floor, the drillers turned on the steam and the spudding bit followed. For his trip Robb was presented with $30 by the contractors.

A Torpedo Shooter's Nerve. There was another instance of nerve displayed near Nobletown yesterday. Joe Van Curen is a torpedo shooter. He handles nitro-glycerine and is expert in its use. He is also a young man of slight figure. Yesterday he was engaged to shoot Greenlee and Forest's No. 1 McMurray well, which is 29 quarts of nitro-glycerine. The well had been cleaned out during the forenoon, and was in good condition to flow. It was one of the biggest wells around Nobletown and a few days ago was making over 100 barrels an hour.

Van Curen lowered the shell into the mouth of the well, filled it with the 20 quarts of glycerine, and was just ready to start down to the sand when the well started to flow. To let go meant death. The glycerine would have been blown into the derrick and a deadly explosion would have been the result.

Van Curen grasped the shell, and for ten minutes held it in the mouth of the well while the strong pressure of gas below was throwing the oil to the top of the derrick. It was one of the finest feats which had ever been performed in the oil regions, and when it ceased Van Curen was almost smothered by the barrels of spraying oil which had fallen upon him. His nerve saved his life.
