DANIELS IN BABYLON.

How Youths Should Conduct Themselves out of the Home Nest.

ENVY FIGHTS AGAINST SUCCESS.

Deci ion of Character Amid All of the World's Temptations.

TALMAGE'S REGULAR SUNDAY SERMON

SEPECIAL TELEGRAN TO THE DISPATCH. BROOKLYN, May 8.-Dr. Talmage took for his subject to-day the character of Daniel. His text was Daniel vi., 2: "Daniel was first." Where in romance can you find anything equal to what Daniel was in realty? A young man, far away from home, introduced into the most magnificent and most dissolute palace of all the earth. The king, wisning to make this young man a prodigy in personal appearance, orders his attendants to see that he has plenty of meat and wine, and Daniel refuses these delicacles and insists on a vegetable diet, refusing everything but pulse and water, waving back all the rich viands with a determined, "No: I thank you."

He surpasses all the princes in brilliancy. As this sun rises higher and higher in the firmament, it puts out all the stars, and if there is anything the stars hate it is the sun. Daniel becomes so much of a favorite with King Darius that our young hero is promoted to be Prime Minister or Secretary of State—the Frelinghuysen or the Bismarck of the ancients. But no man ever attained such high position without exciting the envy of others.

The meanest and wrathlest passion of the soul is jealousy. You see it among all pro-fessions and occupations. I am sorry to say you see as much among clergymen as among other classes of men.

The Envious Demagogues of Babylon, It is a passion bitter as hell and it is immediately recognized, and yet though it blackens the man who indulges in it, men will kindle this fire which consumes only them-selves. There were demagogues in Babylon, who, highly appreciative of their own enpacity, doubted the policy of elevating such a young man as Daniel. They said:

cedar the more apt to be struck with lightning. These demagorues asked rins to make an unalterable decree that barius to make an unalterable decree that ear man who within 30 days shall ask a petilon of anyone except the King shall be put to death. Parius, not mistrusting any fool play, makes such a decree. The demagogues the accomplished their purpose, for they keek that Daniel would not stop sending up

Their appetite was larp with hunger. One stroke of their paw, we carried of their teeth and he would have one littless.

The Nature of the Lions Changed.

How strange a welcome Daniel receives from the monsters. They fawn about him. They cover his feet with their long mane, They are struck with the lock-nw. That night Daniel's sleep is calm and undis-turbed, with his head pillowed on the warm neck of the tamed Hons. But King Darius was not so happy. Envy Never Strikes at the Poor Man.

Rehold in this sketch a touch of human inture. As long as poverty pinches you and you run the gauntlet between taxever and tandlord, and you have bard work to educate your children, there will be des of men to say: "Poor fellow. He ought to succeed. How sorry I am for him." But, after awhile, you begin to emerge from the darkness. That was a capital investment. You purchased at just the right time. Fortune became good-natured and smiled. You builded your own house, longot to be one of the first men on the freet. Now, as you pass, a number of those late sympathizers stand on the corner of the street. They seem at you from under the rim of their hats. You have more money now than they have, and you ought to be seen led at from under the rim of their hats. Before you get fully past, you heart a word or twe "Stark up," says one. "Didn't get it housestle," says another. "Will burst soon," says a find. Every stone in your new house was laid on their heart. Your horses' hoofs went over their nerves. Your carriage the cut their neck.

Success is often a synonym for scorm. The cought to succeed. How sorry I am for access is often a synonym for scorn. The thing a rean wants is religion. The ond is grit. If you do not want to face second is grat. If you do not want to face wild benevit, you must never get to be prime simister. If you are now, as a young man, ising in any one respect, I bless God for our advancement, but I wish to say before quilt this thought, look out for the lions. Daniel's Decision of Character, in, let this story of Daniel teach us

Again, let this story of Daniel teach us that the way to future success is through present self-denial. Not only did Daniel show his willingness for self-restrain, by refusing the havines of the King's table, but must have desired him. must have denied himself much social en-priment and sight-seeing in order to have trained most wonderful proflency in study.

Success to mes From the Lowest Rung. The most of those who have succeeded in any profession or occupation have come up from the very bottom of the ladder. The brightest day began with the twilight. The admitals who commanded the navies of the world started as cabin boys. The merchant princes whose messengers are ships and whose servants the nation's custom houses, once swept the store and kindled the fires. Out of the dark, deep mines of want and suffering has been dug the marble for the world's greatest temples of wisdom and palaces of power.

Show me a man, who, refusing many of the frivolities of rossiping youths, can see more to attract his attention in the pages of a treatise or a history, than in the flush of bright eyes, or the airy step of those who find more skill in their heels than their heads, and I will show you a man who will yet master languages and sway a very scepter over his fellows. Many an education which is now considered complete is made up of a smattering of newspapers and the last page of a fashion magazine. The parlor and the drawing room cannot educate us. They may give us outward adornments of manner, but getting valuable knowledge is like sweltering at a force, hellows in one hand and hammer in the other—like digging in mines with crowbars, prying under the ledge amid the constant bang of blasted rock. Especially is it true that no growth in grace Especially is it true that no growth in grace is possible unless, like Daniel, we are willing to take up the cross, however heavy it may be and rough with nails. Passions harnessed and yoked make excellent beasts of burden.

ledge amid the constant bang of blasted rock. Especially is it true that no growth in grace is possible unless, like Daniel, we are willing to take up the cross, however heavy it may be and rough with nails. Passions harnessed and yoked make excellent beasts of burden.

Daniel Did Not Need Watching.

Again let the story of Daniel teach us the beauty of that youthful character which remains unblemished and upright when away from home. Had Daniel, on arriving in Babylon, plunged into every excess, his friends in Jerusalem would never have heard of it. His dissipation and renunciation of religion would not have cast one sorrow on the family hearth where he had lived or the old family Bible which he used to read. But, although far away from home, he knew that God's eye watched him and that was enough. It is not every young man who maintains the same character when absent that was maintained at home. Frederick watching his father's sheep row on the family hearth where he had lived or the old family Bible which he used to read. But, although far a way from home, he knew that God's eye watched him and that was enough. It is not every young man who maintains the same character when absent that was maintained at home. Frederick watching his father's sheep among the hills or threshing rye in the barn is far different from Frederick on the Stock Exchange. How often does the kind, retiring spirit become bold effrontery, and the accommodating, self-sacrificing disposition once exhibited among brothers and sisters, becomes a cold and unresponsive selfishness, and conomy, wastefulness, and opened-handed charity, tight-fisted stinginess, and the keeping of good hours is changed into midnight revelry.

There is no passare in a man's life of more thrilling interest than the day in which he leaves home and goes off to seek his fortune. The novelty and romance connected with the departure may keep the young man from any poignant sorrow, but parents, who have seen the destruction among strangers of those who were considered promising youths, cannot help feeling that this step is full of momentous importance. Before the youth left home all his conduct was under affectionate guardianship. Outlings of folly, carelessness, and impropriety of manner, and looseness of speech, were kindly reproved.

From Guardianship to Independence. But behold, how the scene changes. The Why we know more than he does. We could father, through the interceding of metropol-manage the public affairs better than he can manage the public aims better than he can manage the public aims selected the son a place in manage the public aims better than he can manage the public aims selected the son a place in some bank or store or office. Schoolmates on the night before his departure come to take their arewell of the young adventurer. That morning he takes a last walk around the old place, and going past some loved the control of the public than the control of the public takes a last walk around the old place, and some son a place in some bank or store or office. Schoolmates on the night before his departure come to take their arewell of the young adventurer. the old place, and going past some loved spot, a sly tear may start, but no one sees it. The trunk is on the carriage, and after a warm goodby, away they speed over the hills.

Set down amid excitements and among Set down amid excitements and among companions not over-scruppulous as to their words or deeds, temptations troop around the stranger. The morning comes, but no family altar, and the Sabbath, but no real quiet, and perhaps at the sauctuary the faces are all strange and no one cares whether he goes to church or whether he does not go. Long winter evenings arrive, and how shall they be spent!

On his way home from his place of business he saw flaming placards announcing rare performances and that this was positively the last night. At the door of his cheerless boarding house no one greets him, tively the last night. At the door of his cheerless boarding house no one greets him, and the evening meal is insipid, for no one cares whether he eats or does not eat. The room in the third story that evening seems dole in and repelling. A book smatched up from the stand proves to be dull, for no sister is there to look over with him. In despair he rushes out reckless as to where he goes if only he can see something that will make him stop thinking. That night may be the turning point in his history. Once within the fatal circle of sin and the soul has no power to repel it.

as no power to repel it. The Continual Exodus of Young Blood. In many a country churchyard is now the grave of some youthful spirit that went away lithe and bounding, but came home diseased and crushed and biasted to disgrace the sepulchre of his fathers. Yet this exodus must be made. As from far distant hills, rivers flud their way through tunnels to great cities, so from far distant points of the country it is necessary that a stream of eat the realise of the world. Maletra such are constantly making their departure from home.

The Lord stretch forth His arm for the deliverance of these Daniels away down in Babylon. Wherever your lot may be cast—In air inland town or in some great scaportmaintain in your absence the same principles of morals and religion which may have been instilled by merenial solicitude. And ples of morals and religion which may have been instilled by parental solicitude. And, while you may feel in your heart and life the advantages of early religious culture, forget not those to whom you are chiefly indebted; and pray that as age comes upon them and the night of death begins to fall on their pathway, the hope of heaven may beam through the darkness, lustrous and steady as the evening star.
