ACTORS' RETREATS IN THE BIG CITY

Correspondence of the Dispatch.

LONDON, May 16.—In nearly every great American city we have some particular locality constantly frequented during certain hours of the day by actors great and small.

The casual passer lingers curiously within the region. Even one least accustomed to striking city phases, is instantly impressed with the unusual character of the neighborhood and with the manners and dress of its frequenters.

Public houses of a cozy rather than a sumptuous sort are characteristic of the place. Windows above are filled with stage costumes. Little low windows and still tinier glass cases or receivers here and there display curious examples of the wig-maker's art.

The Rialto of London. In general and particular everything needful to "the profession," and many things which its members could safely eschew, are gathered up and about this strange little city world within the great city.

Our American "Rialtos" are more marked in concentration and character than those of European cities. In London, where are the haunts of probably more actors than exist in any four or five of the greatest cities, there is no spot which exactly corresponds with the American "Rialto," except one.

Professional Lines Drawn Taut. There are reasons for this close drawing of professional lines. An important one is found in the fact that for a very long time London theatrical managers have sustained an absolute monopoly of all dramatic performances.

Mighty Friend of His Calling. This is universal rather than exceptional. He is therefore justly proud of his vocation. Such names as those of Shakespeare, Keble, Garrick, Macready and Mathews furnish endless pique and spur to his ambition.

Only Two Haunts for Actors. These changeless conditions naturally give London actors as a class but two places that may be regarded as their real haunts—their homes and their clubs.

MISS DORA RUSSELL. Has an unassailable reputation as a writer of popular sensational love stories of wholesome tone and charming style. Her story that begins in these columns next Sunday is entitled that he may better protect himself from intrusion and espionage.

The Happiest Man in the World. In this mite of a home he is as happy a man as there is in all the world. He can reach out to and know its mites and boundaries. It is usually, and more honor to him for it, in a permanent and delightful home balm from the presence of many roistering and gladsome children.

Irving's Exquisite Private Parties. The latter unique little club, which has its home over Toole's Theater, sprang out of the Honorable Society of Beefsteaks, in the old Beefsteak room of the Lyceum Theater, which still exists and is used by Irving for his exquisite private parties.

A Valuable Collection of Souvenirs. The Garrick in Garrick street, Corant Garden, venerable, rich, stately, mellow and grand, has no membership limitation as to profession.

Adjusting the Trouble. Vice President Sheehan, of the Amalgamated Association, and the mill committee of Howe, Brown & Co.'s Seventeenth street mill met with the firm yesterday to adjust the trouble in the crucible department.

Something you can't do is to get Dr. Pierce's genuine medicine at what pretense to be "cut prices." They don't come to you in that way.
