ECONOMY'S GALA DAY.

Celebrating Whitsuntide With Service, Music and Feasting.

VISITORS FROM THE VICINITY

Gather in the Quaint Old Village to Assist in the Ceremonies.

Economy was in gala day attire yesterday, and so was everybody else out there. It was the grand feast day of the year, being Whitsuntide, or, in the language of the Harmonites, Pfingstuntag, and everybody was in feast day spirits as well as attire.

Pittsburgers, Sewickleyites, Beaver Falls folk and the freekle-faced boys and girls from neighboring farms thronged into the quaint little village and filled its broad, clean streets and the great wooden hotel until good old Frau Breitenstein and her worthy spouse, who attend to the requirements of the inner man of the guests, condoled with each other and then piled the tables until they grouned most appetizingly.

A feast day in Economy means a day such as smoke-begrimed citizens seldom conceive, and yesterday was a rare success. The weather was in its brightest mood, although a couple of fleecy white clouds became involved in a quarrel about noon and boxed each other with much unnecessary noise, and the vanquished one shed a few tears, but it only made the ground a trifle wet and cooled off the atmosphere, so the outers did not object very energetically.

The Boys and Girls Looked Pretty. The boys wore their creased store clothes and clean linen. The girls wore sweet, gala day smiles and other pretty things that greatly added to their charms of girlhood. The men wore curious looks and prosaic garb, the women wore spring suits and wild flowers, but it was the staid old Harmonites and Harmonitesses who really gave the picturesque aspect to the day and to the village. The garb of the women is strange and simple. It consists of garments of many hues and the styles of a cycle of years ago. The bonnets are miniature representations of coal scuttles worn upside down and deco-rated with stiff ribbons and stiffs frills and most conservatively straight pleats. The color of these bonnets is that of the brightest green and the contrast they throw upon the white hair so severely straight and precise is most singular. Across the shoulders is worn a small shawl of such an excessively German odd commingling of colors and shades, ranging from the deep purple and bright green to the heavy black and gaudy yellow, that they seem to bear suggestions of stuffy old attics and oddly smelling food and Captain Kidd stories of hidden treasures, et cetera adinfinitum. The r dresses are of somber black and made with strange aspect of squattiness that is pic-turesque if not exactly artistic. Unique if Not Fashionable.

out any waist whatever, giving the wearer a

The male members wear their navy blue coats and home-cut trousers, both of which garments flapped and hung about the bodies and limbs like the sack that contains a number of death-doomed kittens. The headgear is also strange. A hat, tall, stiff and forbidding, with a brim as wide and curved as is the side of a legendary catamaran, lends a weird appearance to the strange asceticists beneath its shelter.
But it was only at times that the curious visitors obtained glimpses of the Harmon-ites, for they did not thirst for self adulation or anything of that sort even if they could get it, and they tarried not by the wayside to smoke cigarettes and flirt with the city girls and boys as certain other folks did. They behaved themselves in a most exemplary manner and endeavored by means of various and sundry severe looks of disapprobation to curb the festive frivolity of the worldly youth who would not curb to any great extent and as a result succeeded most admirably in getting themselves disliked.

The day opened early. When the one-handed clock pointed in its horizontal, er-ratic way to the disagreeable hour of 5, a dozen or more of very sleepy-looking in-dividuals mounted the wooden steps leading to the church tower, and there, after various shiftings and blowings and puffings, began discoursing strains of brase band

After Music Came Breakfast,

This continued in a youthful frivolous manner until the lonely hand pointed to manner that the lonely hand pointed to the brass-headed tack that marks the half hour, and, very much flushed with pride, heart and other interesting things they came down again and proceeded to discuss an economical breakfast from an extravagant standpoint.

Then the sun came up, looked over matters in his colm, dispassionate way, and generously concluding to stay, made things very warm for a while. Along about 9 o'clock Father Henrici arose and he and John Duss had breakfast and then went to the church, where the simple though rever-entially service was held. The sermon was poetical and quaint. The young trustee having an original and striking style and his remarks being made with befitting impressiveness, but in such a quaint, witty style that his hearers were deeply impressed. After service came the little elemential scuffle and the flowers took a drink and the people took an umbrella. Some of the latter ate, to the annihilation of Mrs. Brietenstein's groaning tables.

The sun came out after a bit and the boys and girls came out after each other. The sun stayed but the boys and girls didn't. They ambled in and out of the shady pastoral scenes, and cut their initials in the tree trunks and their more unfortunate brothers and sisters by not speaking to them. This order of things continued until 2.30 o'clock, when the grand concert began in the low, blue-domed town ball.

A Very Successful Concert.

The concert was a success. The band played so many airs that the hair-lipped boy in the back seat had a sort of Fourth of July spasm and had to be taken out to the town pump that he could give vent to his feelings in various insane yells. The double gs in various insane yells. The double quartet sang German songs, looked their unutternble contempt for the gaping throng who couldn't sing and sat down flecked with the odor of the sun's rays. Then Trustee Duss said something in German, after which the band played and the people vacated the premises.

But there was a touch of sentiment about the meeting that was pathetic. This was the scarcity of the members of the society. The Harmonites occupied the first seats from the band-stand, and in the years of long ago, when the society flourished and grew rich under the gentle hand of Father Rapp, these seats were crowded with the curiously seats were crowded with the curiously garbed people. Yesterday eight patriarchal men and four silver-haired women represented all that remains of the founders. Old Father Henrici sat with his white head bowed upon his trembling hands and was flanked on either side by the other old men. Across the hall were the lonely old ladies looking more solitary than ever on account of their strange commens. of their strange costumes.

After the service the people wended their way to the plain, bare cemetery, where the remains of long gone Harmonites rest in unmarked graves. The flowers were laid upon the grass-grown mounds, no tribute of tender memory, nothing but a silent tear, a muttered prayer, and the strange people de-parted for their homes.

SHORT OF MONEY.

The Lincoln School Board Finds Itself in an Unpleasant Position as a Result of a Reduction in Property Valuations by

The board of the Lincoln School, Twentyfirst ward, is in a quandary over the tax levy for the present year and fears it will not have enough money to pay its necessary ex-penses. Prior to the passage of the approprintion ordinance the board sized up its expenses at $15,000 and so reported, as required by law, to the City Controller. In this sum they included $8,000 to redeem the school bonds maturing this year, the interest school bonds maturing this year, the interest on the outstanding bonds, janitor's salary and other necessary expenses.

The Finance Committee received an estimate from the Board of Assessors, showing the assessable valuation of the Lincoln district to be $6,500,000, and taking these figures the committee fixed the school tax at mills. It was expected that, allowing for the amount of the tax that would go delin-quent, this would yield the required amount and leave the usual small balance.

But the Assessors subsequently altered, reduced and exonerated the valuation so that is now less than $5,000,000 net, and the side of the standard of the of revenue, and the State laws will enable them to collect it if not from the property then from the city, and as the fault lies with the city's Board of Assessors and Finance Committee, the city should bear the burden of the blunder. The Controller says it would not be fair to other school districts for the city to bear a portion of the expense of any one ward, and as a mistake has been made the board can rectify it in next year's levy.

A CHANGE IN POOR PARM PLANS.

The Charities Committee Will Inspect All the Farms Offered.

Chief Elliot and City Attorney Moreland have decided that all the properties offered to the city for a poor farm will be examined carefully without regard to the question of regularity of the bids. The Charities Committee, at its meeting on Saturday, decided to visit only the farm of Cantain George Neeld, in South Fayette township, the City Attorney having notified the committee that Neeld's bid was the only one made acvertisement. Chief Elliot has communicated his wish to the committee, and the change in the plans has been agreed to.

The committee, with the Mayor, Controller and such of the City Councilmen as can go, will leave the Fourth avenue sta-tion on the Panhandle Railroad at 9:55 this morning to visit the Neeld farm. The

The Art of Baking

Is one that every enthusiastic housewife desires to know thoroughly. One of the first lessons to learn is the character of the flour. A rich, pure, white flour is what must be used. The best flour is the Marshall-Kennedy Milling Co.'s "Camellia." It is the whitest richest and lightest bread baker in the world. "Bauvard Ambar." their next grade. world. "Bayard Amber," their next grade, is a splendid family flour costing less, but the finest for the price anywhere. It is made to meet the demand for a fine family flour at medium price. Try it.
