MR. BLAINE'S DEPARTURE FOR BOSTON

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Convention day broke bright and serene on the Capital City and all persons specially interested in the proceedings at Minneapolis, including the White House people and the occupants of the Blaine residence, arose betimes, refreshened by a good night's rest, and eager for the fray.

As far as could be discerned, the situation had not changed at all over night in this city. The Blaine managers began the day's work with cheerful countenances, and told all inquirers, without the slightest hesitation, that everything was working admirably for the success of their candidate, and that they were as certain of his nomination as it was possible to be concerning any future event, and felt even more confident as to the result than they did yesterday.

Senator Hale, who is now at the head of the Blaine coterie in the city, and has taken up the management of affairs since Mr. Milliken left Washington yesterday, said this morning that he was almost certain Mr. Blaine would get the nomination on the first ballot. So far as he knew, there was no intention whatever on the part of Mr. Blaine or the Blaine leaders to enter into any arrangement with anybody concerning a compromise candidate, and Senator Hale added that he did not believe there would be any opportunity for a third candidate to come to the front.

A Short and Straight Fight.

He believed it would be a short and straight fight between Harrison and Blaine, with possibly a few votes cast for some other candidate, and that Blaine would come out ahead with a clear majority at the end of the first ballot.

Senator Chandler was less confident as to the decisiveness of the first ballot, but he was still inclined to the opinion this morning that Blaine would win in the end.

At the White House this morning an equal degree of confidence was displayed by all the inmates, from the President down. Private Secretary Halford declared in the most emphatic manner that all the indications received at the White House from Minneapolis pointed directly to the President's nomination on the first ballot. He said the President was not at all disturbed by the reported delinquency of many of the Southern delegates, and that the administration leaders counted up a total of at least 500 delegates for their side, exclusive of those questionable Southern delegates.

Elkins in Charge at Washington.

Secretary Elkins was equally emphatic in his prognostications of success. He is in almost constant attendance at the White House, where he acts as the President's first lieutenant in this campaign, and is in constant communication with Colonel New and the other Harrison leaders at Minneapolis.

The facilities for sending and receiving dispatches at the White House are perfect, and all the arrangements have been made for conveying the news from the convention to the President with the utmost promptness. On the upper floor of the White House there is an apartment devoted to the transactions of all business requiring the telegraph, telephone, etc. Here are the wires, the operators, the typewriters and the messengers to convey the momentous tidings to the President, and everything that is done at Minneapolis will be known by him within a minute's time of its occurrence.

At the Capitol, to-day, there was little excitement, even after the messages had begun to come in from Minneapolis. It had been reported in the morning that the President would fight the nomination of Fassett for temporary chairman, with Senator Cullom as his own candidate for that office, and when the news came that Fassett had been chosen temporary chairman by acclamation and without opposition it created considerable surprise.

Blaineites Delighted Over the News.

The Blaine men regarded this as the first glory for their candidate, and were well pleased accordingly, but they would have liked it still better if Fassett had been chosen after a fight. The fact that there was no opposition to Fassett was claimed by the Blaine men as an evidence of weakness on the part of the President. The Harris on men said, on the contrary, that it had probably been agreed on all sides at Minneapolis that there had better be no contest over the temporary chairmanship, and it was learned at the White House later in the day that the Cullom rumor of the day was without foundation in fact.

The Senate had adjourned and dispersed before the election of Fassett was announced at the Capitol. At the House end, the news circulated quickly among the members, who were evidently much interested in it, and the Blaine men showed many signs of satisfaction, many of them saying that they regarded it as simply the forerunner of final success for their side.

Bulletins were displayed in the various lobbies and press rooms of the Capitol, as well as in the hotels, in front of the telegraph offices, and elsewhere uptown, and the news from Minneapolis attracted fair sized crowds of readers wherever the successive telegrams showing the process of the convention were displayed.

The Ex-Secretary's Quiet Departure.

Mr. Blaine's departure from Washington this afternoon attracted so little attention that it was a surprise. He drove down to the Pennsylvania Railroad station shortly before 3 o'clock in an open carriage accompanied by Mrs. Blaine, Miss Dodge and James G. Blaine, Jr. At the station there was no one to receive them, and when the footman flung open the door of the carriage the ex-Secretary descended first and assisted his wife to alight, while young Jim performed the same office for Miss Dodge. The party then walked directly through the ladies' waiting room, passed by a group of attentive newspaper men, and were at once ushered by an official on board the private car which had been placed at their disposal by Passenger Agent Parke. The car was attached to the Boston express, which is due in that city at 6:50 A. M.

Just as the bell rang, announcing the starting of the train, Mr. Blaine and his son appeared at the rear door of the car, and while the young man jumped to the platform, the ex-Secretary acknowledged the lifted hats of the newspaper men by raising his own. After serving in Washington for nearly four years as Secretary of State and Premier of the Cabinet, and while his name is on the lips and in the thoughts of people of this city at the present moment more than that of any other man, Mr. Blaine left the scene of his labors without a demonstration of any sort attending his departure.

Blaine's Health Not Much Affected.

It is understood to be Mr. Blaine's intention to remain in Boston for several days before proceeding to his summer residence at Bar Harbor, Me., which is his ultimate destination. Mr. Blaine's health appeared to be fairly good, but it is surmised that the warm weather of the last few days has told on his strength.

At the White House there are no new developments. A large number of dispatches have been received from Minneapolis, but they contain merely the estimates of friends on the strength of Mr. Harrison, and don't materially differ from those which have been published in the newspapers.

"President Harrison will fight this battle to the end, and will remain a candidate as long as there is a single man in the convention who wishes to vote for him." These were the words of Mr. Halford, at the White House, this afternoon, and they illustrate the spirit which actuates the President and his adjutants. But though their courage is dauntless, it was manifest that their hopefulness diminished considerably after the details of the first day's session at Minneapolis were received here. The defection of the Southerners and of some Northern Harrison delegates did not appear to give them much concern, nor were they visibly disturbed by the unanimous choice of Mr. Fassett as temporary chairman.

Half of the Battle Won.

But the composition of the various committees, especially the Committee on Credentials and the Committee on Rules, manifestly troubles the people at the White House, and they acknowledge it. They confess that the Blaine men have secured control of the organization of the convention, which is half the battle. They expect now that all the Blaine contestants will be seated and the Harrison forces correspondingly depleted, and while they still claim everything this evening, they are not in reality as confident as they were 24 hours ago.

In the Washington community generally there has been a strong accession of anti-Harrison sentiment to-day. It has been emphatically a Blaine day. Quite evenly balanced in the morning, the general opinion has set strongly in favor of the ex-Secretary ever since the day's proceedings were made known, and nearly everyone is predicting this evening that Blaine will be nominated.

BLOODSHED AT A LECTURE.

Two Men Shot While Father Slattery Was Speaking—Riot in an Opera House at Keokuk—An Exciting Scene, but No Fatalities.

KEOKUK IA., June 7.—[Special.]—Bloodshed followed an attempt to deliver a lecture against the Roman Catholic Church at the Opera House, to-night. In the riot that ensued revolvers were drawn, and Pat Harrington and Tom Glenn were shot. Neither is believed to be mortally wounded.

An ex-priest, Father Slattery, was billed to deliver the lecture. The house was filled early by a large and curious crowd. The word had gone forth that the Catholic leaders would shut off the ex-priest. Father Slattery said he would deliver his lecture at any cost. When he appeared on the platform he was roundly hissed. Others in the house applauded him. Slattery started to speak. Then arose a babel of voices, and a rush was made for the stage.

At this juncture a posse of men who favored the ex-priest ran into the belligerent crowd of church men. A rough and tumble fight followed. Many spectators were hurt and several were knocked down and trampled upon and severely injured. Some one drew a gun and fired.

Pat Harrington fell in a heap on the floor. Another stray bullet wounded Tom Glenn. Several shots were fired, but as far as known only these two men were wounded. The police finally cleared the hall.

WHY BOYER IS PROSECUTED.

A Politician Tells of a Shortage Made Good by an Allegheny Bank.

HARRISBURG, June 7.—[Special.]—Senator Quay will be subpœnaed by the committee as a witness in the suit of ex-Senator Rutan against ex-State Treasurer Boyer, if he returns to Pennsylvania before the date of the hearing before Alderman Maurer, which has been fixed for June 16. Counsel for the plaintiffs are anxious to have the junior Senator brought here for the hearing. A number of other persons of prominence and political influence have been subpœnaed at the instance of Rutan.

The officials of the Enterprise Bank, of Allegheny, the Allegheny National Bank, of Pittsburg, and the Economy Bank, at Beaver Falls, were subpœnaed on Monday. Detective Anderson said that the gentlemen were greatly surprised when the summons were read to them. A prominent Republican politician, speaking of the suit, said to-day:

"When the Delamater-Jamison failures occurred the bondsmen of Mr. Boyer, 11 in number, were compelled to make good the shortage, amounting to $125,000, which would require each bondsman to pay about $11,000. This is the sum Rutan says was paid Boyer by the Allegheny National Bank, and is probably the basis for his prosecution."

Other firemen rushed to the rescue and dragged Hertel and Frommert out. They were unconscious. Percy and Jacoby had almost a miraculous escape. It is feared Hertel will die. Loss on the building, over $30,000, and on the barley and malt, $50,000; insurance, $66,000 on building and contents. Several residences caught fire and were more or less damaged.

GENERAL SPORTING NEWS OF THE DAY

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.]

BOSTON, June 7.—It is a long lane that has no turning. After yesterday's slaughter everybody in Boston looked for an easy victory for the champions to-day, and it looked so, too, when at the end of the third inning Boston had rolled up seven runs on four hits, three sacrifice hits, three bases on balls and three fielding errors. But alas for human calculation, after the Bostons had reached that notch they sat down on a bench to look at their doughty opponents, who were struggling so far below them. But they sat there too long. Foghorn Miller had expected some such move as that, and had quietly besmeared the bench with pitch.

Where Miller's Work Came In.

After the bean-eaters had become firmly "rooted" to the bench, Miller tipped the wink to his captain. Then the Smoky City lads gave a war whoop and in a jiffy had overtaken the chagrined Beaneaters, who were making frantic efforts to escape from the trap into which they had fallen. It was disgusting enough to the 1,200 spectators, but there was no help for it. The above explanation makes the situation plainer than the bare statement that the Pittsburgs won the game by the score of 8 to 7, notwithstanding the Bostons did take a long lead in the very outset of the game. They felt so confident of winning that they lost interest in the game till it was too late. They certainly acted as if they were anchored in the last part of the game when the Pittsburgs snatched a victory from their grasp.

They Made a Gallant Fight.

All the interest was centered in the spurt made by the visitors. The score was 7 to 2 against them when they went to the bat in the last half of the sixth inning. Smith started the spurt by driving the ball to right field for two bases. Farrell followed with a single which rattled Clarkson to such an extent that he gave the next two batsmen their bases, forcing in Smith's run. Burns struck out, but Miller sent a long fly to left field and Farrell scored on the sacrifice. Mack was caught napping on second and the boys took a brief rest. In the seventh inning they tied the score in a masterly manner. Bierbauer was given his base on balls and Shugart flied out, accomplishing nothing for his team. Beckley was safe on Tucker's error, Bierbauer going to third. Smith hit to Tucker and that player made another bad error which filled the bases. The veteran Clarkson got rattled and forced in another run by poor pitching.

Old Reliable Mack Was There.

With the bases yet filled, Mack lined the ball into left center for a single and Beckley and Smith scored two tieing runs. Corkhill forced Farrell at third and Burns flied out to McCarthy. The bean eaters were in great distress when the rumpus quieted down, for they saw handwriting on the wall. They made a desperate brace in the ninth inning and had three men on bases, but good fielding shut them out. Then Captain Beckley led his men to victory in the last of the ninth inning. He opened the sport with a single, took second on Smith's sacrifice, went to third on Tucker's muff and scored on a fourth error by Boston's first baseman. It was not by any means an earned victory, but it counted just the same. The score:

Beat the Strikers.

THE DISPATCH base ball team went against the Striking Pressmen yesterday and pulled the game out of the fire by their work with the stick. McKeever, of THE DISPATCH, had a picnic with several of the Pressmen and was well supported behind the bat by Jessop, who split a finger in the fifth and gave way to Fink. Score:
