

RIVERMEN NOT IN IT. Captain Dravo Loses His Fight in the Chamber of Commerce. HIS PLEA FOR HOME INTERESTS. U. S. District Attorney Lyon Explains His Position Clearly. THE PECULIAR POSITION OF BOATMEN

The manufacturers wiped the floor with the rivermen in the Chamber of Commerce yesterday. It was one of the liveliest meetings the Chamber has ever held. The fight was all on Captain Dravo's waterway resolution. He wanted the Chamber to endorse section 4 of the pending river and harbor bill, which gives to anyone the right to make improvements in the United States Court against the persons who infringe on the waterways. It narrowed down to a contest between the manufacturers and the rivermen. United States District Attorney Walter Lyon also took a hand and the rivermen were whipped.

It had been intimated that if the District Attorney had been more watchful the rivermen would have no cause for complaint. He showed up during the discussion and made a number of remarks about the plan in the Chamber. Captain Dravo and Captain Batchelor submitted their report. Colonel Roberts had refused to sign it. The report called for a better protection of the waterways and requested that the Chamber instruct the Pennsylvania representatives in Congress to see that this section be retained in the bill. The section reads:

The House of Representatives. That any person or persons, corporation or company obstructing a harbor or navigable waterway of the United States, in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair and preservation of certain public works and harbors," approved September 19, 1892, may be prosecuted or enjoined in the United States Court against the person or persons who obstructed, in violation of the provisions of the act of Congress, the navigation of any harbor or navigable waterway of the United States. Provided, that no prosecution shall be entered on any information or complaint unless the same is filed in the order of the court.

When a motion was made to pass this report Captain Dravo spoke as follows: The purpose of this report alters no law or proposes no change of legal processes. Against this simple proposition my esteemed friend Mr. Ricketson, at our last meeting, made a most unwarranted speech, in which he reported that the rivermen respected no person's right but their own. When and where have rivermen infringed or disregarded the rights of others? Have they obstructed any of the highways of trade or travel? Have they interfered with the operations of railroads, or have they compelled to "tie up" at night in consequence of anything rivermen have done? Have rivermen ever been guilty of obstructing manufacturing plants or railroads? Have rivermen appropriated public lands for private use? What article of the public or of individuals have rivermen violated or disregarded? Not one.

Yet river men have suffered all of these hindrances in carrying on their trade in consequence of the doings of others. The rivers, which they occupied for the use of the public before railroads were built, have been rendered dangerous and their use costly, by the occupation of the beds of the river for mill sites, for the construction of railroads and the channels narrowed and made dangerous by the dumping of cinders and other refuse, and by the filling of the capacity of the rivers for floods and ice break-ups. River traffic has been seriously damaged by the erection of bridges with insufficient headway, badly located piers, with restricted channel ways, making the cost of navigation so high that the construction and repairs are impossible to hold river craft during floods or ice break-ups. As a result of these obstructions the rights of our steamers have to tie up at night, increasing the cost of transportation and causing the loss of valuable time. In consequence of narrow channel ways it has become necessary to employ, at heavy cost, steamers to break up ice, and to tow ice rafts frozen over to make it possible to tow crafts moored along the shore. And as a further consequence of these obstructions, the narrow and restricted channels, it has become necessary to send out to sea, to employ a second steamer to tow the ice rafts, and obstructions between Pittsburgh and Beaver and then on reaching Steubenville to tie up for the night. The rivermen are compelled to pay tribute to all of these obstructions by largely increased cost of navigation.

The Pittsburgh depot is located where boats were formerly anchored for safety in times of floods. Nearby its entire road-bed with the exception of a small territory which belongs to the river and is a necessity for the safe passage of goods and cargoes. The rivermen are now in a dangerous position. The debris from the city is being dumped into the river filling up the channels and deterring the river commerce, and yet river men must not complain or move in the defense of these rights which have been taken from them. The Chamber of Commerce is the proper place to present the case of the rivermen. Captain Dravo again referred to the speech of Mr. Ricketson at a previous meeting and denied that the act gave the alderman the power to enforce the provisions of the act, and then concluded by saying: Allow me to submit that in seeking the endorsement of section 4 by this Chamber, I did not attempt to do anything which I was not willing to challenge the utmost scrutiny. The privilege conferred by the said section is so manifestly in violation of the rights of the rivermen that it is a matter of common knowledge that the Chamber of Commerce is the proper place to present the case of the rivermen. I deeply regret that there is no one in this Chamber an uncovered, though occasionally coming to the front, antagonist to immediately home navigable waterways. My personal experience is in proof that he who earnestly espouses the cause of free and unobstructed navigable waterways, is as open as well as secret opposition. The delivery of the Chamber in favor of water interests at distant points is not a matter of course, but the Chamber is very chary on home matters where doubtful claims and equally doubtful rights may be affected.

United States District Attorney Lyon was present and at the invitation of President Kelly gave to the board his legal opinion of section 4 of the river and harbor bill. He said: Mr. Lyon Makes an Explanation. It is a step toward striking down an old and well established policy of the Government. There is no such thing as a private proprietor in the United States Courts, and for this reason it is impossible to have granted such a section in an act of Congress. But, conceding that Congress might adopt the section, the question is, is it a necessary and desirable thing that valuable river land is appropriated for manufacturing sites, and I suggested to Colonel Merrill some years ago, that there ought to be an act of Congress fixing harbor lines.

Subsequently such an act was passed, and it was made as sweeping and as strong as it is possible to draw an act. It gives the United States courts the right to issue injunctions in navigation obstructions and provides a fine and imprisonment for violations of the act. In all violations reported to my office the law has been put promptly into force and violations stopped.

Mr. Lyon then enumerated about a score of prosecutions which he had instituted and pushed to convictions. Among these were the firms of Jones & Laughlin, the Oliver & Roberts Wire Company, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the Western Pennsylvania Exposition Society and Stolzenbach & Pheil. He said that he had tried to do his duty in the matter, and had never disregarded a single complaint from any one who thought himself aggrieved.

Iron Men Opposed to It. Mr. Quincy, by Laughlin spoke against the measure, and cited the immense capital involved in manufacturing as compared with the river industries as an argument. Mr. Roberts followed in the same strain and said it was not right for the United States to say how people shall dump dirt. He believed cities and boroughs should have a right to make wharves, etc., as they please. Benben Miller said the idea of the act was wrong, because it would allow 50 or 100 people to make information against some one against whom they had a grudge and thus ruin him. He said there was power enough now to keep the waterways clear. Mr. Foster did not think Mr. Lyon's explanation was sufficient. He said the State had passed an act in 1858 fixing high and low water lines. If these were fixed Pittsburgh would get all right. The motion on Mr. Dravo's resolution was put and lost. A resolution was adopted instructing the River and Harbor Committee to look up the law of 1858, and find out what recourse is provided for the rivermen to take.

ATTACKING THE WILL. The Contest of Alexander H. Miller's Last Testament Renewed—The Charge of Undue Influence and Mental Incapacity Again Repeated in Court.

Another contest of the will of the late Alexander H. Miller was commenced in the Orphans' Court yesterday. It was in the nature of an appeal from the probate of the will filed by Attorney Raymond, representing Alexander H. Miller, Jr., the appellant. It is claimed that the decedent was unduly influenced by Florence Miller, the son who was the principle beneficiary under the will; also that he was testamentary incapable. A citation was issued on the executor of the will to show cause why the appeal should not be allowed.

The first appeal, which was dismissed, was filed by Hampton J. Miller. Another son is now trying it. TO BE TRIED IN COURT. The Grand Jury Returns a Big Batch of True Bills.
