the Necessary Elements of Danger.

SCARRED BY THE BULLETS.

Fired From the River Shore by the Locked-Out Mill Workers.

A PINKERTON MAN'S OPINIONS.

Captain Wishart Outlines His Experiences During the Cruise.

M'CURRY HAD BEEN UNDER FIRE BEFORE

The Little Bill lay alongside the wharf yesterday afternoon. The number of curious visitors who passed through it and examined its bullet scars would have returned a handsome revenue to Captain Rogers, the owner, if an admission fee had been charged. There is little beautiful about the Little Bill at ordinary times and her present appearance is somewhat more desolate were in the best, who is over six reed built like an athlete. When his detail fired at the targets a squad of strikers suddenly appeared and had the soldiers surrounded in a moment.

J. H. Robinson, a Pinkerton man of Chi-

"It looked for a short time as though we have in for a fight," said the Captain, "and that we have in for a fight," said the Captain, "and that we

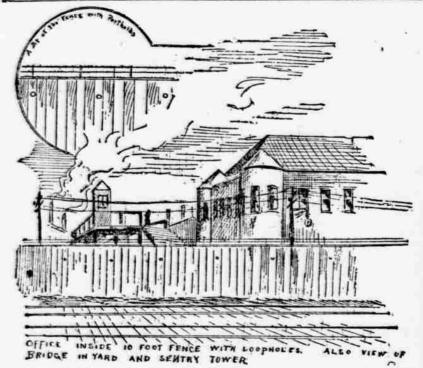

"It looked for a short time as though we were in for a fight," said the Captain, "and the men loaded their guns, and stood on the defensive. When I explained that we were only target shooting our visitors cooled down. They thought, I guess, judging from their actions, that we came out to assist the Pinkertons. A little later I heard some remarks among them about taking our guns, and finally they be-came so bold that I saw we would have to make a stand or they might attempt to dis-arm us. I cautioned the men to be on the lookout for trouble, and then notified the strikers that we would kill the first one among them who tried to take a gun. This seemed to check them for a mo-ment, and before they could do anything a train came along and we got aboard withou wasting any time. For a few minutes I was almost sure we would not escape without bloodshed, for I was determined to keep the guns at all hazards."

WHAT A MODEL BARGE IS.

The Two Boats Which Took the Pinkerton

Men to Homestead The two barges which carried the Pink erton men to Homestead formerly belonged to the Tennessee Navigation Company. They were sold as the property of that company by United States Marshal Harrah last week. They were well supplied with cots and bed clothing. Tables were arranged along the centre of each and in the aft end were roughly constructed kitchens. All the necessary utensils were supplied, in-cluding ice chests.

A model barge is built somewhat differ-ent from the ordinary coal barge, and, incago, big and burly, with a slouch hat, a stead of being open, is covered on the top face that may at one time have been frank and good-humored, sat on the lower deck. He treated his recent trip to Homestead and back as a mere routine matter in his work, and spoke of other and hotter occasions when he had been under fire. He exhibited one hand minus a finger as part evidence of his long service under the Pinker-

Proud of His Employers.

He is proud of his employers and speaks of them as possessed of millions of money, in control of thousands of men, and not easily rebuffed. He was strong in his opinion that the strikers would be made to regret their actions before long and that with a free hand the Pinkertons would be able, ready and willing to avenge their losses.

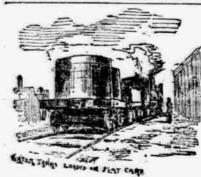

Bullet holes and imbedded bullets are in conspicuous evidence all over the boat. The panes of glass in the pilot house and cabin windows are broken in many places and three or four partitions have in some instances been penetrated by the same bullet. The steam whistle was punctured by one missile and the main steam pipe was struck but uninjured by another.

The men on board who had made the trip were comparing notes with one another and thanking their stars that all but one of their number had come off uninjured. Captain Wishart, who was in command of the Little Bill throughout its adventurous voyage, was too tired to give a detailed account of the occurrences.

Had Been Under Fire Before.

This was not his first experience under fire, as he said it was his misfortune to be in charge of the tow which brought the militia to this city in 1877. He asserts that on the journey to Homestead "No shot was fired by the Pinkerton men until two of their number had been wounded. There were not more than twenty rifles among the two barge loads of men. The fire seemed to be directed almost exclusively at the barges until the Little Bill lett them. But on the journey to Port Perry and back the Little Bill had to run the gauntlet of a regular fusillade from both sides of the river for a mile below Homestead. The reports were more frequent than you ever heard on a Fourth of July. I was in the pilot house, and that seemed to be the principal target for the shooters. There was only one man wounded on board and that was John T. McCurry. I was imply obeying my orders and performing he work for which I was hired. I asked o questions and considered it none of my usiness to inquire into the character of my urgo or the disposition to be made of it ter it left my hands at its destination."

A Veteran of the Late War.

John T. McCurry was wounded in the roin on the Little Bill's return from Port Perry toward Homestead, and brought to Pittsburg on board the steamer, and taken from the wharf by an ambulance of the Allegheny General Hospital. In an interview resterday morning he said: "My name is John T. McCurry, and I am 64 years old. For 17 years I was on the Allegheny police force. I have been under fire before, as I served during the war in Company B, Sixty-Second, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was wounded at Fredericksburg in 1862. I was employed temporarily by Captain Rogers last night. The workmen opened fire on the detectives; I have my God to meet, and if I am to die now, I am willing to take oath that the workmen fired first, and that the Pinkerton men did not A Veteran of the Late War, first, and that the Pinkerton men did not shoot until some of their number had been

Captain Corbett and His Men Have a Lively

Experience. Captain Corbett, of Company K, Fourteenth Regiment, got a taste of the fight yesterday. He had a detail practicing at the rifle range at the salt works. There were not over ten men in the party, and all Best for General Household Use.

A Bloody Pillow From Homestead. Officer Moore yesterday afternoon found a pillow in the Monongahela river near the Point bridge. It was covered with blood, and it is supposed came from Homestead. He took it to No. 8 Police Station.

An opportune friend will be found in Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant, when racked by a severe cold, and the many lung or threaffections which sometimes follow. To This old remedy has met the approval of two generations, and is to-day as popular, safe and effective as ever.

Mr. W. M. Terry, who has been in the drug business at Elkton, Ky., for the past 12 years, says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives better satisfaction than any other cough medicine I have ever sold." There is good reason for this. No other will cure a cold so quickly; no other is so certain a preventive and cure for croup; no other affords so much relief in cases of whooping cough.
