THE LABOR SUPPLY.

Matthew Marshall Moralizes on the Modern Monopolizing of It.

SOME OF HIS ORIGINAL IDEAS

On the One Topic of Universal Conversation and Interest.

THE GENERAL TREND OF BAPPENINGS

PEPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH. NEW YORK, July 24 .- "Monopolizing the Labor Supvly" is the title of Matthew Marshall's article for to-morrow's Sun, which is as follows:

Nothing worthy of comment has occurred this last week in the world of finance. The indisposition of the public to engage in stock speculation which has prevailed al-most uninterruptedly, both here and in Europe, ever since the Baring collapse of 1890, is intensified by the usual summer absence of moneyed men, and on Tuesday the volume of transactions at the Stock Exchange was reduced to a degree of attenua before, except on the day of the blizzard of 1888, when scarcely anybody was able to get down town. Since Tuesday matters have mended considerably, and the sales of bonds and stocks have shown a decided increase and higher prices. For the sake of the brokers who have been having hard times lately, it is to be hoped that the improvement may continue, but the harvests are at hand, with the usual annual demand for money to move the crops, so that I question whether a really lively stock market can reasonably be expected before autumn. The Richmond Terminal reorganization, concerning which important news has been daily awaited, seems to have gone to sleep for the present, and it is unofficially an-neanced that its slumbers will not be broken until circumstances are more favorable to a resumption of activity. Certain it is that none of the heroes who have been besought to undertake the rescue of the concern have accepted the task, and no one now can pre-dict who will accomplish it. A Dull Week in Congress.

In Congress, the debate on the anti-optio bili has occupied the languid attention of the Senate, but its final enactment is doubtful, and the dread of its injurious effect has very much diminished. There is no talk of ful, and the dread of its injurious effect has very much diminished. There is no talk of a renewal of the agitation for free silver, and the exports of gold have ceased, probably for this reason.

In this dearth of other exciting topics, the attention of financiers and capitalists has naturally continued to be occupied with labor disturbances at Homestead and elsewhere. In common with all good citizens their first desire is that order may be preserved and lawiessness repressed, while the attempted assassination of Mr. Frick has brought home to them a lively sense of the insecurity, not only of property, but of lives of owners of property, if the popular hostility against rich men, of which I wrote a fortnight ago, be not restrained from breaking out into acts of violence. It is only just to the workingmen at Homestead to acquit them of direct complicity in the attack on Mr. Frick, but the that fact a small army of soldiers is needed to protect the newcomers at the mill from similar outrages shows the spirit that prevails there. Here, in New York, some Italians hired to unload bricks have just been clubbed by the men whose vacant places they took, and one striker has been convicted of murdering, last year, a "black sheep" whom he could hot otherwise persunde to refrain from work. These incidents, following many others of the same nature, recounted by one of the Pinkertons in their evidence before the Congress Investigating Committee, deservedly alarm the owners of capital, and excite in them an untriendly feeling, to say the least, against those concerned in them

No Resort to Crime Necessary. Looking at the subject from the point of view of a philosophical and dispassionate observer the violence which so often accompanies strikes is seen to be after all superficial and unimportant in comparison with the underlying purpose it is used to aid in accomplishing. Attacks upon refractory employers and their property and upon workmen who refuse to join in strikes will eventually. I have no doubt, be suppressed, not only by the public authorities, but by the leaders of the strikes themselves, who cannot iail, after awhile, to learn that they injure their cause instead of helping it. They will discover, as they have in a measure discovered already, that they need no resort to crime to coerce employers into granting their demands, but that there are means within their reach more effective and not prohibited by law.

The strikes of the last few years have involved more than the question of wages and hours of labor. They form part of a concerted effort ail over the country to combine into one organized whole the men who work for wages, and thus to deal with employers companies strikes is seen to be after all into one organized whole the men who work for wages, and thus to deal with employers as a gigantic monopoly of the commodity most essential to them. In creating and maintaining this monopoly moral pressure upon the workmen who refuse to unte in it, and strictly legal obstructions to the business of employers who resist it, are destined to play a more and more important part as time goes on. For example, the strike now in progress at Homestead was begun because some 500 of the superior skilled workmen of Carnegie Steel Company demanded higher wages than the company was willing to pay. Besides refusing to work themselves, these waces were not in question, to refuse to work also.

Possible Extent of the Trouble.

The extended strike having as yet failed to accomplish its purpose, other bodies of workmen for the same employers have also been persuaded to strike work, and, in addition, at various distant points, men not directly interested have agreed not to handle the product of the refractory emhandle the product of the refractory employers for the purpose of making its sale impossible until the demands of the original strikers are conceded. Here in this city, building operations are at this moment much hampered, and may soon be entirely suspended, because a single firm of employers has refused to discharge a man in their employment who has been expelled from the union to which he formerly belonged.

As a rule, union men everywhere refuse to work alongside of non-union men, and thus many employers are compelled to restrict their selection of employes to members of unions. Since, too, a refusal to join a strike when duly ordered by the officers of a union to assist other strikes entails severe penalties, ending in case of protracted obstinacy in expulsion from the union, an employer who engages in a controversy with one union must make up his mind to risk a contest with all of them.

This is what the strikes now in progress test with all of them.

This is what the strikes now in progress are coming to. If they are not settled by some kind of compromise, and if the employers persist in attempting to carry on operations with non-union men, a trial of strength will come between these last and the union men in which both sides will do their atmost, with the probability of an ultimate victory by the union.

Blockades Up to the Present. Up to this time many things have prewented the unions from perfecting the monopoly at which they aim. Their inter-nal di-cipline is far from being so complete that they can always hold their members in enforced idleness long enough to make a strike successful. Too many workmen chafe at being prevented from earning the wages they need for the support of themselves and their families, and insist upon accepting work when work is offered to them. Beside this, in a great many occupations there are as many non-union men as there are union men, and the vacancies caused by a strike of union men are easily filled. This is especially true of vocations in which little training is required, as in car driving, coal handling, and even, as we have lately seen, street paving. strike successful. Too many workmen chafe handling, and even, as we have lately seen, street paving.

On top of all is the vital defect of a lack of honest and intelligent leadership. The ordering and management of strikes require therough information as to the needs of employers, sound judgment in formulating demands and great personal influence in preventing conduct which, like that of the Homesteaders, tends to alienate general sympathy. From a want of these qualities in their leaders many strikes have heretoin their leaders many strikes have hereto-fore falled, and more are destined to fall if the detect is not remedied. Strikes which are inopportune or unreasonable or accompanied either with violence or with a wanton disregard of the comfort of the public, can-not in the nature of things succeed.

The Stability of Trades Unions. Nevertheless, trades unions being, as I have often said, grounded upon the necessecuring of the greatest possible compensation for their services and of protection against fill-treatment, will exist as long as does the relation of employer and employed. Nor can it be expected that their members will relax their efforts to compel all other workmen to join them, or at least so nearly all of them as to give them a practical monopoly of the labor market. How the employers of labor have been perfecting and consolidating combinations on their part, and how, day by day, the number of great employers diminishes, while that of their employes increases, is known to us all. That employers diminishes, while that of their employers increases, is known to us all. That a corresponding perfection and extension of organization 'should take place among workmen is an unavoidable result.

The point, therefore, to which labor unions seem to be tending, and to which habor unions seem to be tending, and to which they will continually in the future come nearer and nearer, is a complete organization of all workingmen on one side, confronting a complete organization of employers on the other. In the measure in which this approaches accomplishment, disputes about wages and conditions of labor will come to resemble dealings between sovereign nations. The individual workman will be reduced to the position of the individual citizen of a nation, and, like him, have to suumit to the will of the majority, no matter what may be his personal preferences. To a man o my independent notions the prospect of this state of things is not pleasing, but I cannot see any other alternative to the present reign of labor disturbances.

A BLOW FOR A BLOW.

Canadian Newspapers Claim Their Country Can Give Uncle Sam His Fill of Retaliation-They Even Claim the St. Clair Flats Cana!.

TORONTO, ONT., July 23.-Commenting on the proposed retaliation measures of the United States Government against Canada in the matter of canals, the Toronto Neces (Liberal-Conservative newspaper), in an editorial headed "Blow for Blow," says: It should be the policy of the Dominion Government to cultivate the most friendly relations with the United States, but it is good to understand that this is not to be brought about by lying down and allowing the Americans to walk over us. They have the Americans to walk over us. They have deliberately set about carrying out measures intended to annoy and injure this country. They have refused seamstresses living in Sarnia the right to earn their living in Fort Huron; they have tumbled French Canadian immigrants from a train at the border; they have put linemen in jail who have crossed the frontier for the purpose of making some trifling repairs on the International telegraph line; they have refused to allow our sailors to seek employment on their lake vessels without first foreswearing allegiance to their native land; they are now engiance to their native land; they are now en-deavoring to turn the Grand Trunk ticket agent out of Buffalo because his family re-sule in Canada, and they threaten to impose an almost confiscatory tariff on Canadian vessels passing through the Sault Ste Marie canal.

very good. It is the duty of our Government, under the circumstances, to return blow for blow. Americans employed in this country should be deatt with precisely as Canadian laborers are dealt with across the line. If the Americans want fight, and nothing else will do, give them enough of it.

The Montreal Star says:

It is clearly idle to point out to the Washington authorities that they have wantonly violated the very treaty upon which their claims to the free use of the Welland canal are based. They are not in a logical mood just now. The drum of the campaign is too loud in the land. They are determined to bait us as a British community, and the position of affairs at Welland makes it a good enough pretext. All that is left for us to do is to clean out decks for action. In the first place, any injury they can do us at Sait Ste. Marie will be merely temporary. By the autumn of 1833 we are promised our canal, when we will be independent of our natural allies from Port Arthur to the sea. But they, with all their boasting will be at our mercy. Suppose we close the Welland against them—what can they do? And even if they at great expense did dup leate this work around the Buffalo peninsula, ffren as Congressman Lind told his hot-headed colleagues, "We cannot build a St. Lawrence river." Then there can be no doubt that the St. Clair flats are ours, and this is a point our Government cannot raise too soon. Thus we can stop American vessels at St. Clair, at Welland and at St. Regis, while they can only check us for a year at Saut Ste. Marie. The Montreal Star says: while they can only check us for a year at Saurt Ste. Marie.

DAYLIGHT BANDITS CAUGHT.

The Alleged Robber of Banker Moffat, of

Denver, Behind the Bars. DENVER, July 24.-A great sensation was created shortly after midnight last night by the bringing into town of J. H. Cross and J. Daniels, charged as principal accomplice in no less a robbery than that of David Moffat, President of the First Nanal Bank of this place. On March 2 1889, a daring robber entered the First Na-tional Bank in broad daylight, and at the point of a revolver forced Mr. Moffatt to give up $21,000 with which the thief made good his escape.

The arrests were made by Detective W. T. Sawyer, who claims he has been working on the case for two years. Daniels confessed to Sawyer that Cross was the robber and that he (Daniels) has helped pass some of the money. Cross denies all knowledge of the robbery.

Buying Blennerhausett's Furniture. BELLAIRE, July 24.-[Special]-Secretary A. A. Graham, of the State Historical ociety, and Artist Phillip Clover are in Marietta, Mr. Graham to secure a lot of Blennerhassett's farniture which is held by people living in the vicinity of the old island, and Mr. Clover to paint a large picture of the landing of the first settlers, for which he has been studying for several years. He will have men dressed in the costume of the time and go through the landing movements. The picture and the furniture are for the World's Fair.

will open the Pittsburg line for passengers and traffic this fall on the adoption of the fall and winter schedule. It is not the intention of the company to abandon the line via Grafton entirely for trains to Chicago. One express will run by that line while the vestibuled limited, and probably one other train, will run via Cumberland, Pittsburg and Akron, striking the present line at Chicago Junction, in the northwestern part of Ohio.

The Steamer Trave on Tria'. BERLIN, July 24.—The case of the steamer Trave, of the North German Lloyd line, which recently collided with and cut in two the ship Fred B. Taylor, has been tried by the Bremen Sceamt. The Court blamed First Officer Meissel, of the Trave, for driving the steamer too fast through the fog, but at the same time praised the sailorlike action of the officer when the collisions with the collisions when the collisions were collisions when the collisions when the collisions were collisions where the collisions where the collisions were collisions where the collisions were collisions where the collisions were collisions where the collisions where the collisions were collisions where the collisions where the collisions were collisions where the collisions were collisions where the collis the officer when the collision was seen to for two or three days, but did not know whether he would entirely succeed. He expressed a disinclination to talk on the sibject, but when pressed, said:

"I am very much impressed with prospect of the success of the Democratic ticket this fall. The demonstration in New York last week must have been very gratifying to every man who has the success. tring to every man who has the success of his party at heart. It gave practical dence of the fact that there is a united party and with a united party we are sure to win at the polls.

Candidates in Touch With the People "The ovations to ex-President Cleveland and Mr. Stevenson were certainly magnifi-cent, and I am sure were thoroughly appre-ciated by those gentlemen. I think the whole thing indicated that the candidates were in touch with the people and that counts for a great deal."

"Not yet. Probably not for some days. It is important, and I propose to take my time and do the matter as well as I can. There are three committees to be selected. altogether. The first is the Executive Committee of 25, the second is the Campaign Committee of 9, and the last is the Advisory Committee, which is not limited as to numbers. The membership of the last two committees can be made up from within or without the National Committee. I have been looking over the membership of the National Committee, and I am glad to say that it contains plenty of strong material from which to select members of the various sub-committees. I have some ideas on the subject, and have blocked out a sort of skeleton of the various committees in my skeleton of the various committees in my mind, but as I have said they will not be proceeded with immediately?"

"That is the intention. The plan of publicly notifying the candidates of their nomination was a decided success. It had the effect of bringing together nearly all of the important men of the party. Every section of the country was represented, and the keen interest felt was attested by the fact that a number of those present came thou-sands of miles in order to be present. It has also virtually had the effect of starting the campaign fully six weeks before the usual time. This is certainly an advantage. While we propose to buckle down to hard work at once, a great deal of it will necesat once, a great deal of it will ne

He has closed his Philadelphia house for the season, and is now looking for a desirable cottage on the Jersey cosst. The probabilities are that he will locate at Long Branch, which is within reasonable access of both Philadelphia and New York. Mr. Harrity has been a busy man since his elec-tion. He has been daily in receipt of hun-dreds of letters and telegrams. They come from nearly every section of the country and from men of national reputation. The private secretary of the Chairman has been working overtime for the last week, but even in this manner it has been found to be an impossibility to personally answer all the messages that have been received.
