Saratoga Hotels Threaten to Close Unless the Clubs Keopen.

THE SMALL PLACES MUST DEPART.

Small Gambling Houses Cannot Be Meddled With or Touched.

THE WIND UP OF A DETERMINED FIGHT

SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 27.—The great battle against the gamblers has been fought and the result is that but two of Saratoga's many gambling resorts are open to-night—Spencer's clubhouse and the Boston game.

All the minor places are actually closed, and the doors of the Chicago game, one of the leading establishments, have not as yet been opened.

Spencer's place, the greatest of all and one of the famous institutions of Saratoga, was formally thrown open to the public on Saturday evening, though the place was not put into full running order until to-day.

The reopening of Spencer's was a great event for Saratoga and was due to the efforts made on his behalf by the managers of the leading hotels, and more especially of those three mammoth caravansaries, the Grand Union, the United States and Congress Hall.

A strong fight had been made against the gambling resorts, and it looked for a time as though one of Saratoga's chief attractions was to be killed, and the noted, and the fearful of their own interests, came to the rescue of the clubhouses.

For several years the fighting against the gambling places has been carried on with more or less vigor. The objections were smaller against the clubhouses than against the petty roulette and faro games that thrived in every side street and that bid for the trade of the colored waiters and the small fry generally.

Leaders of the Anti-Gambling Fight. That the crusade should have terminated in complete success for a time this summer was due to the talk of Albert Spencer himself.

Spencer has been the gambling king of Saratoga for several years. He is in partnership with John Morrissey and Charley Reed, and he succeeded to the great gambling interests that made those powers. When Morrissey went into politics in New York, he relinquished his Saratoga establishment to Reed & Spencer, remaining a silent partner.

He died, and Reed, after about five seasons' stay at the public, withdrew his interest himself in his stock farm at Gallatin, Tenn., leaving Spencer in sole control.

Up to this summer Spencer has owned the race track. He sold out to Walburn & Co. for $250,000.

It is personally a most unpopular man. Morrissey, when angered, would strike a man, but he was well liked by the crowd. Reed was one of the most daring gamblers this country has ever known.

Spencer is not that sort of a man. He wants a "shade" of the gambler's advantage every time. If some of the players at his faro tables have a strong run, of luck he perches himself back of the dealer and surveys the operations with a sour look.

He has a magnificent place, but he is looked upon as close fisted and unbusinesslike. One of the leaders in the anti-gambling fight here has been Mr. Spencer Trask, the New York broker, who owns "Yaldo," one of the most beautiful summer homes in this neighborhood.

Up to this summer Spencer has owned the race track. He sold out to Walburn & Co. for $250,000.

Up to the time that the Ives pool bill required the betting on the tracks Mr. Trask's scheme was to have the race course removed from Union avenue, believing that that thoroughfare from the Springs to the lake could be made one of the most beautiful drives in the world.

Against the small places every objection existed, but the objection to the clubhouses from the standpoint of the resident Saratogian, none. The clubhouses have drawn to the Springs scores of men of wealth, who would never have come here had it not been for them.

Spencer was taxed $3,000 for his race track and club house—a comparatively insignificant sum, especially as pools have been sold every afternoon at the race track in violation of the law, and he has received $100 a day from this source from each of six-teen bookmakers in addition to the $100 a day they paid for the morning privileges.

The Officials in Trouble. Spencer thought that he had been imposed upon and he spoke about the matter to a number of people. The result was that a Police Committee was organized to investigate the deal made inquiries about the matter and asked Spencer whether the story as it had reached him was true.

local business men than to kill the goose that lays their golden eggs—in other words, to drive away their city visitors. The outcome was that the authorities declared that they would not interfere with the big clubhouses unless they had to do so, and that if Spencer was willing to take that chance he could open.

There was a fair attendance at the opening, but there would have been a far greater crowd under ordinary circumstances if the place had never been interfered with and been running as usual.

"I have just been a couple of weeks at Long Branch," remarked the manager of the place. "During all that time I didn't see as much real gambling as we have had here to-night."

While there were at no time very many players there was a large amount of money on the tables. A well-known New Yorker came into the game at the wrong time and dropped a pile of money.

To-night the clubhouse is ablaze with lights, and the business is as large as it was at the same period last year.
