INT OF PHYSICAL IMMORTALITY

PETTER FOR THE DISPATOR. s a somewhat complex affair with which ow proposed to deal, and yet, after all, a creature that should be run, and may u, on simple principles. It is with a il framework as regards structure, an il being as regards formation, a biped ards class and something so transceny important-in its own mind-that iniverse was constructed for its own ial accommodation. is an electro-chemical-mechanical afs regards locomotion, a philosophical metion possessing consciousness and on, a thing that draws nothing direct the soil, but instead, is a portable mir into which is dumped its feed, its nt to supply nourishment. In other the creature carries within itself a ce which has to be stoked with either able or animal fuel or both, from the combustion of which is generated the essence of "lite."

The Firebox of the Machine. I this that calls for the first essential rement, a generator, a thing we familknow and recognize as a stomach. It rebox, the all-important article in the accoutrements that pertains to the ment of a well conditioned and well ructed human creature. It was a grand ce in the creative process, when this came, when, instead of being vegeta-ied to the soil, growing from roots and ring through leaves, the animal ma-came, loose and endowed with loco-en, moving on four feet, with a lifeting apparatus within the outer walls

It is a revelation to see the crea-gradually and so slowly unfold itself, by the stern law of necessity tilon to changing conditions and the decree of the survival of the fittest; to finally rear itself on its hind feet, the inally rear itself on its and to hards—an it meantime transforming to hards—an it now instead of a horizontal engine out to its lower congenirs: "Beout to its lower congenies: "Beabeled all over with the marks of my o saveth otherwise I will make life I will. I will wage unrelenting n all below me; yea, with my own a and favored of the gods."

A Lot of Pipes and a Pump. the firebox, while of paramount im ce, has still to be supplemented with contrivances. Blood, which performs portant function in life and which is a kind of preliminary condition to here must be and this must be puricailing into requisition organs known is grated, the condemned substance expelled by exhalation. The blood is in pipes through this vertical a motion being given to it by the I a pump known as the heart, the iself being operated by automatic eal action furnished from a storage known as the lower brain, which deis supply from the chemical action of ntents of the firebox. It may be that the pumping action and the of respiration are entirely self-acting ly antomatic and under normal con-

But other features are still ery to sustain the condition known as life when the type or form of life is ower than in the human plane. human, where the breaking of electric brain cells in a day may reach as high as 50,000,000 in a stock of a possible 300,000,000,000, a lay-over-sound sleep—is nesessary to the purpose that the stock may be refurnished. This, of sourse, presupposes that the firebox and other functional organs are all in normal condition. If we survey this brain development throughout the entire animal kingdom from the phrenological standpoint we shall see that a steady stride in the direction of a higher mentality is exactly measured with the in-crease of cerebral brain. We may observe the upper line of the facial angle slowly lifting and the sharp acute space become more and more enlarged, until, in the higher humans, the lines not only produce a right humans, the lines not only produce a right angle but go beyond it.

It was a most wenderful triumph for Dra Spurzheim and Gall to so determine the brain indication, to locate even the separate organs and assign their functions, albeit they probably never in their day realized the full significance of their discovery. It may be affirmed without the slightest risk of successful refutation, that all that pertains to life, to volition, to consciousness to mentality, can now be con-clusively and scientifically accounted for, that every phase, feature, fact, force or phenomenon may yield to solution, in short that there is not a single thing for an under-standing of which we need grope or confess Teking Care of the Furnice.

But a few thoughts with reference to the treatment extended to the generator: There is probably nowhere under the canopy another thing on which is imposed such inconsiderate, outrageous and atrocious abuse as the average enlightened (?) human being extends to his stomach.

Is it any wonder that we die? No! It is a fact that, from a scientific point of view, we live longer than we ought. What view, we live longer than we ought. What messes unsuitable in kind and unseasonable in time are dumped into this poor and con-tinuously working servant. Who considers fitness or quality of material in its relation to generating electricity? A generator? It is rather a sink, a sewer, a Pandora's box from which winged ills, ornamented with death's heads and cross bones, fly forth as trom a cauldron in some interno! From the swill-tub to which the general buman stomach is transformed, what perniciousness has not gone forth. The ideas with claws, with bat-like wings and satanic heads, can all be traced to the sourced putrescence of some ill-conditioned stomach.

There is a recuperative provision that once in about seven years completely replaces each particle in the human anatomy, and were we wise and did we grasp and and were we wise and did we grasp and did we care, of this we might avail ourselves and be borne on the current of useful life into the centuries. As it is there is an occasional octogenarian in whom this principle is not wholly extinguished, but who comes to "second sight," who again "cuts teeth" -- poor nature, sometimes not completely crushed, trying to throw a hint of what might be.
