

Mr. Eva Muller, of Sewickley, daughte of W. H. Muller, has been doing the honors of their country seat, Ben Venue, Beaver county, during last week, and to a number of young Sewickly friends who drove across the country in a huge van going by way of Baden. The Mullers rightfully are very proud of this place, which is as nearly as old it is said as the family is in America. I have heard somewhere a story of how Ben Venue came by its musical sounding name, either identical with or a corruption of a from the lips of a female ancestor, when her eyes first rested upon the rural beauty of this lovely spot in Beaver-all the more lovely since it was the first resting place succeeding a ride across the State, after the orude manner of our forefathers.

Miss Muller's guests were Miss Mina
Shields, Miss McLain, of New York; Miss
Jessie Mackintosh, of Elizabeth, N. J.; Mr.

I have been permitted to be a prophet and to assert with all the unctious authority of a Delphian oracle, though with less mystery, that society is going to delay itself this winter. To tell the truth, society, i. e., the winter. To tell the truth, society, i. e., the creme de la creme, reflects just as much a condition of things, as far outside its province, as the equator is removed from the North Pole, as does that still larger element also termed society.

Some happy go-luckies who only think for recreation may suppose a Presidental elec-tion does not affect a smart function, or rather the intention to give a smart func-tion. I have known Presidental elections to interfere in the happiness of brides and bridegrooms to be. A young lady four years ago was a Cleveland 'man," her nance an adherent of Harrison. She made public confession of her faith, he protested and displayed in full view his own particu-lar color. The possible honeymoon faded out of sight, and hardly looked the size of its own dying quarter, when the young man sought for terms as follows: If Cleveland were elected the young lady should marry her betrothed; if Harrison was awarded the White House her betrothed should do the marrying. You all know the rest of the story. But think what a narrow escape! Supposing a thousand supposes; for there is no telling what will happen with the affections on the stretch in a Presidental year.

The interesting study classes, over which Mrs. Graff, of Sewickley, has presided so ly for several years, will deal this with England from the Norman conincluding not only the stirring hisnglo-Saxon literature and the archiof the middle ages, as evinced in the England of those days.

Bat I been given one wish last week I should have hesitated between a good wave and a chance to lister to Mrs. McCandless singing old-time songs at Bedford in accompaniment to Mrs. Kelly's readings from Sir Walter Scott's works. Mrs. McCandless is one of the lew remaining representatives of a more courtly age than our own and those permitted to have the pleasure, even of mere occasional intercourse with this charming gentiewoman, feel indeed that they have been privileged. Mrs. McCandless' recollections go back to the very earliest days of her childhood life, and when she chooses to tell of these her listeners would be cor tent to remain transfixed for hours. A certain liveliness of narration, with a gleam of humor and a touch of pathetic sentiment, make Mrs. McCandless a companion mo often desired than experienced. She is the widow of the late Judge McCandless, of

Although Miss Anne Graff, of Sewickley, has been studying dramatic culture and singing for the past two years in Boston, it is not likely that the young lady will ever appear on any stage except that of the Sewickley Dramatic Club, where she will be among friends. She is mentioned in a Boston paper as being the belle at the hop last Saturday at Lake Massopong Motel, Massachusetts, where she wore pink gauze over a pink silk slip trimmed with butterfly bows of pink ribbon and a golden butterfly in her pretty dark hair. In the East she is thought very beautiful. She is coming home, for a visit only, in October. While in New York with her uncle, W. A. Coffin, she was commented on for a strong likeness to Miss Sallie Hargress—now Mrs. Duncan Elliott-only a younger, fresher beauty of the same type.

Miss Elisy Gunff is doing similar work in water color, for which she has some talent, especially in flowers. She paints very aristically in china with a water color effect. She, too, has made quite a success socially, and is much admired. At present she is at Lakewood, the guest of her aunt, Mra. Thomas Graff.

The Hon. John J. Lentz, of Columbus, O., is making a short visit with his brother. He will go from here to Washington and New York with his wife, who has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Lentz for a number of weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Quincy will leave the Kenmawr Hotel on Monday for Narragansett Pier, R. I., to join the Chief Juslice of the Supreme Court of Ohio and Mrs Williams, who are sojourning there, hav-ing headquarters at the Gladstone Hotel. The Quincys will not be home until Sep-

All the nesessary arrangements have been made for the select fete and summer night concert to be given by the Columbus Club, Pittsburg's leading Catholic social organiza-tion, at Silver Lake Grove Tuesday evening next. The well-known character of the club guarantees the affair will be the social event of the season. Prof. Charles Fleming is arranging a vocal programme, which he promises will be unique and will surpass anything of the kind ever heard in this city. There is a great demand for tickets. They can only be programed. can only be procured from members of the club and are not for sale. The grounds at Silver Lake are being "fixed up" for the fete, and the decorations will be handsome. The dance after the concert will continue

The guests took their departure about midnight, after having spent a most enjoyable evening.

A marriage that occurred in this city on last Wednesday evening was of much interest to the Braddock people and others in this vicinity. The bride was Miss Jean this vicinity. The bride was Miss Jean Craig, the daughter of the late John Craig, of North Braddock, and the groom was Mr. James McClain, of Allegheny City. The ceremony was performed at 7:39 o'clock at the home of Mr. James McKean, of Temperanceville, the bride's uncle, by Kev. Mr. Stevenson, of the U. P. Church. The bridal pair left on Thursday morning for an extended wedding tour in the East. They will live in the East End.

At a reunion held at the house of Mr. Thomas Hays, in Pulaski township, near Rochester, were four generations of guests. The anni were four generations of guests. The anniversary was that of the sixty-third return of the marriage day. The host is 86 years old. Among the interesting branches of this hale old tree were: James Hays and family with three great-grandchildren; James M. Allegheny stands alone among the cities the municipal office of "City Organist" and recitals. This is, of course, the appropriate mode of utilizing the fine concert organ which, with the library and music hall containing it, Mr. Carnegie presented to the

Or at least this would be the appropriate mode, if the weekly entertainments were in fact, as in name, "organ recitals," and if the incumbent were in fact a trained, competent organist,
It was mainly through political manipulations of Mr. Leonard Wales that the office was created and the salary fixed at $1,200 a year (soon reduced so $600), and it was mainly through the same means, rather mainly through the same means, rather than because of peculiar fitness for the post, that he became the first incumbent, Last Angust, upon Mr. Wales' resignation and before his successor's appointment had been announced, a strong plea was put forth in this department of The Disparch against further wasting the splendid opportunities of promoting the public's musical pleasure and benefit through that unique office.

It was then pointed out that the standards of organ playing in this community were pitfully low, although an extraordinary amount of money had in late years been invested in fine, new instruments; that there was practically no opportunity of hearing organ music outside of the churches and not much worth hearing there; that the vast majority of the clurches had to put up with players, who were either not trained at all to the legitimate uses of the instrument, or too much busied in other lines to keep in practice; that there was not one organist in this vicinity actually ready, in point of ability, training and freedom from other activities, to step into that office and play properly such weekly programmes as ought to be given.

It was, therefore, urged that the original $1,200 salary be restored and a thoroughly competent organist he hunted up and induced to locate here, a man whose playing at the free recitals would at once delight the public and set the sorely-needed standards for ambitious local players, and whose prestige and general activity as an organ specialist would tend to raise that whole important branch of music in our community out of the very secondary, little respected place it had so long been forced to occupy.

munity out of the very secondary, little respected place it had so long been forced to occupy.

That sad condition of organ matters in general has not materially inproved in the past year. Nor have the Allegheny recitals been placed as yet upon the plane they should occupy, though certainly they have been somewhat better since Mr. H. P. Ecker's incumbency began. He makes no pretense of having undergone the thorough course of special training that is just as necessary to make an organist as to make a pianist, a lawyer or a doctor; nor could he for the small salary of $600 neglect his flourishing business so as to permit proper preparation of weekly programmes up to the standard. The programmes themselves furnish abundant evidence of these facts.

Accordingly—in spite of strong personal rea-ons that would incline the writer to keep still, if such considerations had weight in this department—the continuing failure to reap the public good that should flow from those free recitals has been frequently deplored in these columns. And so long as this use plorable condition continues will its betterment be urged whenever occasion offers.

In line with the above were the brief general comments which were made in speakng of one of Mr. Carter's programmes three weeks ago, and which were somewhat misombated in a letter printed by a local cotemporary the following Sunday over the name of Mr. Joseph C. Breil. The greater part cotemporary the following Sanday over the name of Mr. Joseph C. Breil. The greater part of that letter is not worth noticing here; this journal has no room for mere quibbles or personalities of this nature. But a distinct issue of fact, and one as to which the public should be informed, is tendered in the following sample fragments:

"Mr. Ecker has always had a due regard for legitimate organ standards, " " With permission of Mr. Ecker's secretary, all the programmes of his recitals at Carnegie Hall are placed at the disposition of anyone. " In all his exercise of the duty of city organist Mr. Ecker has always been judicious and has never descended to the commonplace. The music rendered by the city organist has always been of the good order and with a due regard for organ music."

Through Mr. Breil's subsequent courtesy, the present writer has obtained and carefully examined 35 out of 40 programmes announced by Mr. Ecker from August 15 to June 1. covering the recitals numbered 35 to 102 inclusive, excepting six, for which the programmes could not be had. The task of classifying the 376 programme numbers, many including two or three short pieces, is especially difficult because of the indefinite and changeable tiles used and the presence of so many pieces outside the recognized repertoire. However, with the assistance of a gentleman particularly well acquainted with the literature of the organ, the following list has been made, including quite certainly every composition originally written for the organ appearing on those Actual Organ Music Scarce, In this list, the benefit of the doubt has been given to the programme-maker. As it stands it shows that pieces written for the organ appear on those programmes not over 67 times at the most. The 26 little pieces printed in italics were each bracketed with organ appear on these programmes not over of times at the most. The 26 little pieces printed in italics were each bracketed with one or two others to make a single programme number. Count them as 18 numbers and the outside total of real organ music is 24 numbers out of 376.

The list shows 55 different titles as printed on the programme. Of these at least eight are, no doubt, really duplicates of others given with a slight change of title; so that the entire organ repertoire drawn upon consists of 47 pieces at the most. And of those, seven is a low estimate of those listed above only because they might possibly be organ pieces and must likely are not such in lact. That would reduce the number to 40.

It is certainly within the truth to say that in those 34 "organ recitals" the entire repertoire of actual organ music did not exceed 45 distinct pieces, making up not more than 30 out of 376 programme numbers.

Even that pitiful number of 45 pieces does not include any important representative works. Anyone at all familiar with the rich, varied literature of the organ, comprising (especially in the French school) such a wealth of fine works sure to please any fair audience, cannot but ridicule that sorry array of comparatively trifling pieces.

Furthere comment is needless, except that one should not shrink from pointing out the very strong inference that such programmes could not reasonably be looked for from a trained, competent organis. This confirms the declarations of several competent judges who have attended some few of the recitals (which the writer has not been able to do) that the make-up of the programmes

It is obviously impossible to go into details as to the other parts of these programmes.

The meat of the question is the portion detailed fully above. No matter how the balance of the programmes was made up, if that was all the actual organ music and such its quality and such the style of its performance, those entertainments are not properly called "organ recitals."

Out of the 376 numbers 145, about two-fifths, were given by a variety of assisting performers. Many of these were desirable and appropriate. But this cannot be said of the 14 recitations, comic and otherwise, of the "chalk talks," the mandolin clubs, the "jublice singers" and the brass band. And two parts of assistance to three parts of organ playing is not, at any rate, a good formula for an "organ recital."

The 231 programme numbers played by by the organist are open to further criticism as containing at all such unmitigated rubbish as the "Owls' Patrol," "Darkies' Dream," etc., and pieces so unsuited to the organ as the adaptations of Liszt's Second Rhapsodie, Gillet's "Loin du Bai," Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," etc. They include a deal of sentimental stuff like Jungmann's "Heimweh" and Blessner's "Swiss Maiden's Prayer," and a large quantity of pieces written for brass band and good for nothing else.

There are a good many standard pianoforte and operatic selections which, if properly arranged for organ, would be proper enough There are a good many standard pianoforte and operatic selections which, if properly arranged for orgau, would be proper enough in reasonable number. But a very large proportion of the pieces played were by these writers: Jungmann, Blessner, Leybach, Schrammel, Tobani, Pacher, Nesvadba, Isenmann, Mcor, Kozelnck, Boehm, Behr, Magdeburg, Bonheur, Brandl, Beaumont, Gungl, Fairbach, J. Gro, Michaelis, Gilmore, Schmelz, Gobbaerts and Bella.

Bella.

That list of composers would of itself be enough to settle the character of the presumed "organ recisals" for which that fine organ and the people's money are being mis-

the more general subjects open to comment this week.

In local circles there is very little to speak about. Miss Margaret Newell has returned from a protracted course of vocal study in New York and will sing at the Fourth Avenue Baptist Church to-day. Miss Lois Belle Cory, of Cleveland, will be heard at Bellefield Presbyterian Church this morning.

But the burning questions are: Do those 34 programmes really constitute 34 organ recitals? If not, what business have they to be perpetuated? Are the people content, even if Mr. Breil is?
