The President May Be Convinced That Three of His Monetary Conferees

NEW CHARGES ABOUT ARMOR PLATES

[FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17 .- Notwithstanding the reiteration by some or the officials of the administration that there is nothing in the argument that Senators Allison and Jones and Representative McCreary are not eligible to hold office as members of the Monetary Conference, there is good reason for the statement that President Harrison is not convinced in his own mind as to the legality of the appointments, and that the whole matter may yet be referred to the Attorney General for an opinion. If it come to that, it is asserted by some of those who ought to be best informed on the subject that the Attorney General will be compelled to decide in accordance with plain precedent, which; will show that since the erection of the Constitution no such appointment has been made, or, if made, it has been withdrawn, as in the case of ex Governor Kirkwood, of Iowa, who resigned his seat in the Senate to accept the position of Secretary of the Interior under President Garfield, resigned that office upon the succession of Arthur, and was prevented from accepting a place upon the Tarrif Commission for the reason that the act creating the commission became a law during the term for which he was elected. though he was not a member of the Senate at the time the law was enacted. What he Constitution Has to Say.

The Constitution of the United States, article I, section 6, prescribes that "no Senor Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created, or the emoluments thereof increased during such times; and no person holding office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continu-It would seem that the whole case rests upon the definition of the meaning of the term "civil office." It is claimed by persons who have some reputation as expound-ers of the meaning and intention of the Constitution, that any office created by net of Congress, and to which the sauction of the President is necessary, is a civil office. Thus either of the houses of Congress may provide for committees of investigation to the president of the houses of congress may provide for committees of investigation to the committees of the tion to go upon junketing tours at the ex-pense of the Government during recess of Congress, but these are not civil offices, but merely operations in pursuance of an order of the body of which they are members. It is argued that the clear intent of this provision of the Constitution was to prevent collusion between the Executive and the legislative arms of the Government to reward favorites of the administration, and, therefore, that a Congressional junketing tour to Europe or elsewhere, in pursuance of a formal act of Congress, brings the jun-keters under the prohibition of the Constitution, which declares that no member of either House of Congress may hold civil office created or whose emoluments were increased, during the term for which he was

In the case of Kirkwood there could have been no moral objection, as he was ap-pointed from civil life, but the language of the Constitution was so plain that the ex-Senator accepted, without protest, the opinion that he could not accept a civil office created during the term for which he was elected, though he had nothing to do with the enactment of the law creating the

If ever the Constitution could have been properly strained it was in connection with that appointment. In the instance under discussion two of the Congressmen ap-pointed members of the monetary conference were active leaders in advocacy of the enactment of the law creating the conferenactment of the law creating the conference, and of which they are about to become beneficiaries. Senator Jones, of Nevada, opposed the bill because he was in favor of free silver, and if the free coinage bill had been passed by the House and signed by the President no monetary conference would have been necessary in the opinion of the silver men. Senator Allison and Representative McCreary urged the conference as one of the means of defeating the free comage bill, though for different reasons. They would seem to be peculiarly affected, therefore, by the prohibition of the Constitution. Indeed, Senstor Allison was specially instrumental in having important changes made in the bill as it was reported from committee, and his appoint-ment, under the circumstances, makes him and the President conspicuously liable to the charge of collusion.

The Nominees Entirely Unobjectionable. Of course, no one objects on personal grounds to the appointment of any of the gentlemen. They are all admitted to be eminently well fitted for the office of commissioner to a great monetary convention which may have vitally important results. The discussion on all sides is based purely on the constitutional basis.

Some one to-day in the public prints asserts that the cases of Senators Alison and Jones and Representative McCreary are identical with those of Justice Harlan and Senator Morgan, who were appointed mem-bers of the Bering Sea arbitration. Nobody has ever disputed the eligibility of Justice Harlan, and as to Senator Morgan, he is appointed under an act of Congress, but by virtue of a treaty with a foreign country, and with which Congress as a body has nothing to do. No act creating the office was passed by the two Houses of Congress and signed by the President. The cases are, therefore, not parallel. Of course the President may ignore the Constitution, and the authorities of the States of which Allison and Jones and McCreary are citizens may pass the matter over in silence. In the case of Senator Allison, however, whose life is now made pleasant by the thought that he is governed by a Democrat, a peculiar condition of things might arise. Allison in a Sort of Box.

The moment the acceptance by Senator Allison of a position as member of the mon-etary conference is announced Governor Boies might be seized with an uncontroll-able desire to declare his office as Senator vacant and order a new election. He would be borne out by precedent (though not in the case of a Senstor) in such a step, and by the letter of the Constitution as it is interpreted by some very eminont authorities. A number of friends of the gentlemen now so much discussed are looking on with interest to see the outcome of this wide difference of opinion.

A story has been in circulation to-day that reflects severely on Secretary Tracy and Commodore Folger, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. It is, in brief, that these officials, without consultation with a board of officers, as prescribed by law, made important changes in the construction of the turrets of the new battleships, and that a consequent change was necessary in the structure of the armor plates, rendering them much easier to roll or forge, and that the owners of the Bethlehem and the Carnegie mills would make hundreds of thousands of dollars in consequence, as there had been no change in the price paid for the plates.

Both Commodore Folger and Secretary

Tracy are absent from the city, and as the matter was new to Acting Secretary Soley, that official did not teel justified in making any statement until he had thoroughly investigated the matter.

No Chance to Make Much Out of It. Another official who is conversant with this portion of the department work told THE DISPATCH correspondent that he could not see how there would be any great What the Constitution Has to Say on the Subject at issue.

Could not see how there would be any great price of the firms mentioned, even if the price of the plates was unchanged, as the plates of the top, or revolving part of the turrets, formed a very insignificant portion turrets, formed a very insignificant portion of the armor of a vessel, or of all of the war vessels contracted for combined.

A turret is 1734 feet in diameter. The revolving part of the former turrets was conical, to deflect projectiles. This form gave the gunners too little space for their work, and was therefore changed to the cylindrical, corresponding to the other vertion of the turret which does not other portion of the turret which does not

Another reason cited for the change is that the conical armor plates, involving both a conical and a cylindrical curve, were difficult to make and it was found that to persist with them would delay the completion of vessels in hand. The official referred to would not admit this, however. This official asserts that the bids were for both the cylindrical and the conical plates, the price being clearly stipulated for each, and that if the form was enanged and the conical plates, with their double curve, dispensed with, the manufacturers would simply re-ceive the price agreed upon for the cylindrical plate.

On y a Few Bundreds, at Best.

But even if this were not the fact, the manufacturers would make very little out of the difference in price upon a few turrets 17½ feet in diameter, possibly a few hundred dollars, instead of a few hundred thousand, as rumor had it.

Another insinuation is that the truth in regard to the trial tests of armor plates has never been told, and that the Secretary and Chier of the Bureau of Ordnance have tavored the Harvey and nickel process tar beyond their deserts. This is doubtless untrue. THE DISPATCH has had an absolutely trustworthy expert on the ground at all the tests, and his reports have coincided in every important particular with those of the department

In tone it is equal to the best organs, and in its case (walnut, rosewood or ebeny), the number of its keys (seven octaves), its light action and plano pedals, it is like an upright plane. THEATRICAL NOTES.

HARRY WILLIAMS' Academy will be re-opened for the season with a strong attrac-tion.

Anchie Gordon, the well-known manager is trotting a preliminary heat in advance of "The Struggle of Life,"—a fortunate thing for the play. Later in the season he will resume his position with Fanny Davenport's company. Mr. Gordon is now in the city. The regular season begins at the Grand Opera House on Thursday, August 18, with Primrose & West's Minstrels. It is said that the songs and comedy of this company are warranted to be new and devoid of funeral flavor, and the names of the leading lights warrant the belief that laughter rather than tears should result from this dose of minstrelsy.

streisy. Axong the melodramas which made some thing of a mark last season was "The Struggle of Life." It will follow "Underground" at the Bijon Theater next week, and the company which is to play it arrived last night in order to have the rehearsals here. The scenery, which last year was a strong feature of the play has been renewed, and is said to be finer than it was last year.

In spite of the heat a fairly large audience attended the performance of "Damon and Pythias" at the Grand Opera House last rythias" at the Grand Opera House last night. The play was well given by Walter Osmond, E. S. McKim in the title roles and a fair support. Miss Estelle Purcell was highly satisfactory as Calanthe and Miss Minnie Granl made a very pleasing Hermion. Mr. Osmond's Damon has been deservedly praised before, and he has improved his former impersonation. The play will be repeated to-night. Many Knights of Pythias were present.
