LATE NEWS OF THE CHOLERA SCOURGE

LONDON, Aug. 17.-The first meeting of the new Cabinet was held to-day. Mr.

Gladstone presided. The session lasted two hours. It is probable that Mr. Burt,

Laborist, will be appointed Under-Secretary of the Home Office; Mr. Buxton,

Under Secretary of the India Office, and Sir Edward Grey, Under Secretary of the Foreign Office. The Right Hon. Elward Marjoribanks, Patronage Secretary of the Treasury, sent out to-night his first whip, asking the Liberal members to assemble in the House of Commons to-morrow.

The resolutions adopted at the meeting of Chicago, Monday, are being used by the Unionists to embarrass the Liberals. The Times says that one of the principal problems of the Separatists is the treatment of so-called political prisoners. It is probable, the Times adds, that the Clericals, including Messrs.

Dillon and Davitt, would readily acquiese lantic is too strong. This feeling affords the Parnellites a dangerous instrument, with which they will keep prodding the Clericals. The Times regards the meeting at Ogden Grove as a proof that dynamiting more advanced admirers have often re-proached Mr. Gladstone, and is a warrant for predicting that Mr. Gladstone's bark will prove worse than his bite. The Telegram announces that Lord Salis-

POLITICS IN WARM WEATHER DOSES

[FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Mr. GRETNA, Aug. 17.-To-day there was formally opened here a farmers' encampment, which is expected to exert a powerful influence among the agricultural element throughout the State. Politicians of all shades will endeavor to impress their particular theories and principles upon the assembled grangers, in the hope of a profi-table harvest in November. The People's party, especially, is well represented, as a determined effort is being made to inculcate in Pennsylvania the ideas which temporarily swept so many southern and western States from their established political moorings.

But the new organization is not to have the field to itself. Advocates of cold water will even dispute it's title of the "Third Party," claiming that doubtful honor for the prohibitionists. Democratic orators will attempt to convince their bornyhanded auditors that free trade as exemplified in the Chicago platform, is the panacea for all moral ills, and answer the charges freely heard here that Cleveland is the Wall street candidate.

Then the twin doctrines of protection and reciprocity will be vindicated by able speakers chosen by the Republican State Committee, who will show that the American farmer has the best market in the world at home, and, under the reciprocity treaties now being put in operation, exceptional op portunitiee abroad.

Emborate Preparations on Foot.

This, the first day of the encampment, was largely devoted to elaborate preparations for the coming events. Quite an assemblage has already gathered, though, and this affair promises to be far the most extensive in the history of Mt. Gretna. The exhibits are profuse and varied, though not quite so numerous as would have been the case had there been no riots in Buffalo. A quantity of machinery en route to the encampment is detained at that point, and at least a portion of it is reported to have been destroyed in

The opening addresses were delivered this afternoon by James G. McSparran, of Lancaster, President of the Encampment Association, and John A. Gundy, of Adams county. Dr. Goldsborough, of Union county, was also upon-the list, but sent a message announcing his inability to be present to-day. Mr. McSparran will be remembered as a most earnest candidate for the nomination as Auditor before the Demo eratic State Convention of a year ago. When he was set aside for Robert E. Wright he practically bolted the ticket, and is now sympathizing if not affiliating with the Pennsylvania promoters of the Peeple's In his speech to-day, though, he avoided the use of party names, though the address was chiefly devoted to political

The Burning Need for Recreation

President McSparran first touched briefly upon the farmers' necessity for recreation; such as those of the encampment are at present enjoying, and enlarged upon the advisability of combining, in cases of this sort, instruction and business with pleasure. He defined the meaning of citizenship as applied to the farmer, and urged upon him a more careful and considerate exercise of the elective franchise. He referred in terms of scorn and decision to the high-handed way in which he said corruptionists in office are dealing with the affairs of state, and argued for State and national legislation in the interest of the farmer to whom alone the wealth of the nation can be traced and upon whom the welfare of the country primarily depends.

The exact tenor of this legislation was not indicated, further than a general expression for the inflation of the monetary circulation, in some manner yet to be de-

Mr. Gundy followed much in the same strain, being equally severe in his denun-ciation of the alleged enemies of the honest agriculturist. During his remarks he referred to the Homestead affair and the other labor disturbances throughout the country as evidence of the prevailing unrest of the time. He held that the farmers, the class practically supported the country, should also be the class to protect it. Good Roads One of the Necessities. During the informal discussion which followed, James B. Meyers, of Cumberland county, said: "To my mind there are ques-tions of more pressing practical moment for Pennsylvania tarmers to consider than the purely political ones. It is all right to discuss legislation to provide good markets, but we should have a good way to get to these markets. First-class roads, for in-stance, would be more of a boon to us in this State than a big increase in the circulawhich might never reach us. The investigation made by THE PITTSBURG DIS-PATCH a year or two ago emphasized a fact familiar to every one of us—that the vast majority of the roads in the Keystone State—are simply a libel on the name. If this encampment should be able, after proper discussion, to suggest a feasible and acceptable achieves for road improvement is will-able scheme for road improvement it will have accomplished a great work." Mr. Meyers' remarks were received with evident approval, and it is probable that the road question will be taken up formally at some time during the session. Among the most active personages now on the ground is Henry C. Snavely, State Presi-dent of the Farmers' Alliance. If Mr. Snavely goes at farming as energetically as he does at politics he should be a phe enal success as an agriculturist. He is an enthusiastic advocate of Weaver, Field and the vote cast that way in November will be a surprise.

Great Faith in His Party's Growth. "What is the present status of the Alliance organization in Pennsylvania?" Mr. Snavely was asked by THE DISPATCH correspondent to-day.

"We have been growing steadily from the start," he replied. "Our progress has not been quite so rapid as in some other localities, but it is satisfactory and sure. We have members now in practically every county of the State, and every member missionary. The time is not far distant when the farmers of Pennsylvania, like their brethern in Kansas and South Carolina, will be able to make their wishes known in a most emphatic manner.

What proportion of the members of the "All of them, I believe," answered Mr. Sunvely. "We have become tired of the cratic candidate.

"All of them, I believe," answered Mr. Sunvely. "We have become tired of the old parties and the old cries. The Republicans and Demiorats are now the same, to all intents and purposes, and neither Harrison nor Cleveland favorany of the legislation demanded by the agricultural interests. The only dispute between these organizations is over the offices, and one will use just as lawless methods as the other to gain or retain power. Bulldozing in the South and bribery in the North are their favorite weapons, and Wall street and the corpora-tions are satisfied, no matter which wins. These cries of protection and free trade are largely pretense. Neither of the old parties propose to change the system of taxation, and under it the revenues of the Federal Government will continue to be raised through the custom houses. The difference between the Republicans and Democratupon this point is merely one of degrees Neither party touches upon the real issue of the times."

Making Converts for the Al'lance. Mr. Wible, of Gettysburg, a member of the Encampment Executive Committee, is another People's party enthusiast. He is busily engaged in the work of making converts for the new organization.

It must not be supposed that the advocates of Weaver and Field have the ground here all to themselves, or even that they are in the majority, but their representatives were certainly the most conspicuous and active during Mt. Gretna's opening day. To-morrow Governor Pattison, Lieutenant Governor Watres and J. T. Wilnean, lecturer of the State Grange, are announced as the speakers. The Governor is at present at Montrose, attending a G. A. R. celebra-tion, having quitted the temporary summer tion, having quitted the temporary summer capital at Cresson vesterday.

On Friday there will be farmers institutes, at which practical topics are to be discussed at length, while Saturday has been designated as "Labor Days" T. V. Powderly, A. W. Wright and J. A. Beaver are expected to be present to assure the present of the labor are grangers of the co-operation of the labor or-ganization in all efforts at reform. Next week will be devoted almost exclusively to politics, and each party will be given an opportunity. On Monday the cold enthusiasis will be represented by National Prohibition Chairman Cockie, State Chair-man Patton, and probably ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas Tuesday belongs to the People's party. George Francis Train, Senator Kyle, of South Dakota, N. A. Demming and T. St. Clair Thompson, lecturer of the Pennsylvania Alkance, are the orators who will exemplify the creed of Simpson and Peffer. Wednesday the Demo-crats will have a chance, and on Thursday the Republican spellbinders will expose the fallacies of those who have gone before them. Among those expected to speak then is Hon. John Dalzell.

Among the incidents to-day was the re-ception by the Executive Committe of a postal card from Citizen George Francis Train, outlining his proposed address next Tuesday. The card was written with red and blue pencils, and judging from the brief sketch the coming speech will be BANCROFT. equally colored.

LITTLE CONTEST IN MICHIGAN.

Wolverine Democrats Find No Trouble in Picking Out a Ticket.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Aug. 17.-Harnony with a very large-sized "H" was the rule to-day in the largest Democratic convention Michigan ever saw. The withdrawal of Governor Edwin B. Winans left smooth sailing in respect to gubernatorial honors, and there was scarcely enough rivalry in regard to the minor places on the ticket to make the proceedings interesting. The only ripple which at all disturbed the convention's serene course was the candidacy of Adolph A. Ellis, of Ionia, for the Attorney Generalship. Mr. Ellis was indorsed two weeks ago for the same office by the l'eople's party, and this fact aroused some opposition from the true blue Democrats. The great majority of the delegates, however, declared Mr. Ellis' Democracy quite good enough for them, the minority submitted gracefully and the People's party man was nominated by acclamation,

The jolly Secretary smiled his acknowledgment and was conducted to a seat in the center of the stage. Ex-United States Senator Spooner, of Hudson, and John C. Haunted to the Madhouse by the Shadow of Nihilists.

A STRANGE STORY FROM ABROAD.

Wealthy Copenhagen Banker Who Resembles Russia's Ruler

NOW REALLY BELIEVES. HE'S A KING

Advices from Copenhagen of the latest mail record the tragic ending of a comedy that has furnished amusement for the Danish capital and its fun-loving people these last 10 years or more. M. Carlsen, the wealthy retired banker, who never went by his own name but always by that of "the Czar's double," has ended his erratic career in the madhouse, an incurable lunstic, the victim of a baleful resemblance to the Russian Emperor that wrecked his

No more remarkable story than this of Carlsen has been told for many a day. He was a wealthy rentier, a retired banker, who lived by his means and enjoyed life in the rational manner of his gay townsmen until the Czar and his imperial household began to come to Copenhagan to spend the summe months at the Danish Court, at Bernstorff or Fredensborg.

It was then that the strange likeness of Carlsen to the Russian autocrat was noticed and began to make people talk.

A Remarkable Resemblance. It was at all times really remarkable. He was of the same heavy build, with the same half sinister, half good-natured countenance, of exactly the same height and with the same sort of beard, eyes and hair as the Emperor. Any one might have mistaken the one for the other at any time, and many

The Czar is a great favorite at Copenhagen, and the astonished banker sudderfly found himself cheered and celebrated in a hundred ways when he showed himself in public during the imperial visits. At first he laughed at it. He was a good-natured man with rather a weak head and prone to vanity. Then, gradually, as he saw how much adulation the odd conceit threw in his way, he began to encourage it by half un-consciously adopting the ways of the real Czar, his manner of smiling, of bowing in response to salute, with one finger upon the

From that to adopting the dress of the Czar, the white cap itself, the gray cloak, every item of his wardrobe down to the ots and trimming his beard as he did, was only a step, but it was the wretched man's first step toward the madhouse. To counterfeit the Czar became his overmastering passion, his one conscious aim in the sum-mer season when Alexander came to town. His cowardice saved him from carrying out his crazy notion across the sea, where it would be dangerous. He played Czar only in Copenhagen-but kept out of the read of the Nihilists.

Always Abend of the Parade. The first gun from the harbor that an nounced the arrival of the Russian Court saw Carlsen down as near to the pier as the police would let him get. Sometimes, be-fore Carlsen came to be the character he was of late years, even they would be im-posed upon and would let him through the lines with great show and circumstance only to find they had been fooled.

If not, he would next appear, as likely as not, in the harbor just ahead of the imperial procession from the direction of the Russian ship in a boat exactly like the Czar's launch, rowed by a crew like his, the observed of all of course, and thus his vanity was tickled and his ambition satisfied. In the reception of the real Czar the bogus one would be forgotten a moment later with a laugh, but he had had his triumph and was content.

Before the processoin of carriages could be formed to go to the palace of Amalien-borg, Carlsen would reappear on terra firms to resume his place at the head of the parade in his liveried carriage, guiding his four-in-hand team exactly as the Czar had been often seen to do, and bowing right and left. All the old women along the street would courtesy and green sentinels would present their arms as he passed, with his one index finger laid solemnly upon the shade of his cap.

The gamins would yell "Hurrah!" and the Czar's double would go home happy.

If, as it often happened, some one stopped him to hand up a petition or to ask for help, his satisfaction would be complete, and such petitioners would be likely to fare better with the bogus Czar than with the real one, who never learns what shoals of begging letters beset him while he is at

He Had Plenty of Money.

Carlsen would generally heed the request for help. He had plenty of money. It was his great mistortune that he had. There was nothing else for him to do than to spend it in following out his crazy notion, and it had full swing.

The result of it all, on a mind like Carlsen's, could have been forseen. He wound up by believing himself really to be the Czar he had long so successfully counter-feited. He built himself a villa, in imitation of one owned by Alexander, out on the shore road, as close to the palace of Bernstorff as he could crowd, and gave up his identity altogether. Then the mischief was done. He had crossed the threshold upon which he had lingered so long and entered the shadow of the Czar's throne, as he thought, and the shadow struck terror to his weak soul. Carlsen was no Alexander. The shadow of the Nihilist and his bomb frightened him the Nihilist and his bomb frightened him out of what sense he had lett.

His smile died. He no longer drove about in his four-in-hand. His sleepless nights were spent in his villa in haunting dread of the approaching dyamiter. He discharged his cook, fearing poison, and surrounded himself with an armed bodyguard of men, who had orders to let no stranger approach without searching him for tranger approach without searching him for weapon or bomb. He fenced in his estate weapon or bomb. He renced in the with walls strong enough to repel attack by the enemy. He Goes Mad at Last,

He refused to see his agents, when they came to report to him upon financial mat-ters. The story went abroad in the city that the Czar's double had gone mad. And the the Czar's double had gone mad. And the story was true.

One morning, not long ago, the explosion came. Carlsen's neighbors on the shore road were surprised by a visit from his agents asking them to sell their land. Some consented, some refused.

The farmers were told that they would hear further from the Czar shortly. To the others he sent word that, whether they liked it or not, they would have to sell. What they liked or didn't like was not the question, but what he wanted. He was the what they liked or didn't like was not the question, but what he wanted. He was the Czar, and the buildings about his lands sheltered Nihilists and plots against his life. Come down they must, houses, garden, railroad and all. He wanted it.

Then they took him to the madhouse. His family, that had metable him to the madhouse.

family, that had watched his reason give way, powerless to interfere, called upon the authorities to step in, and Carlsen was taken to Bidstrup, the Danish Bedlam, where he now is. The doctors have pro-nounced his case incurable. He will die as he lived, the Czar's double.

It is said that Carlsen was once introduced at Bernstorff to the real Alexander, who knew all about his crary notion. The two together looked as like as two drops of water. The Russian looked his counterfeit over in half disdainful, half amused silence, and at the end of the inspection, without a word, felt his arms, then turned his back upon with a grant of contempt. him with a grunt of contempt.

Alexander is a giant in strength, with muscles of steel. The other's were as flabby as his brain. He was but a poor counterfeit, after all. And he was right. The real Czar lives, despises the Nihilists of flesh and blood. His double dies, driven mad by their mere shadows. Via the B. & O. BIG ORDNANCE TO SHIP.

Preparations for the Transfer of the Mon terry's Material to 'Frisco. WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.-Preparation are making at the navy yard in this city for shipments of the ordnance outfit of the coast defense vessel Monterey across the continent to San Francisco. This will be the largest single shipment of ordnance material ever made in this country, and will require a complete train of cars to carry it. During the Chilean controversy, when it was thought the Monterey would be needed for service against the Chilean navy, one or two 12-inch guns to be mounted in her forward turret were shipped out to her, and preparations were made for hurrying the rest of her battery along as rapidly as possible, work being pushed on her guns at the Washington yard to the ex-clusion of other work in the shops. Then came the Chilean apology, and the rush work was stopped.

Since then all the guns and mounts have been completed. The second of the 12-inch guns will be shipped on the special car built by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company expressly for carrying heavy guns for the navy. The two 10-ineh guns for the after-turret will be loaded on two extra strong flat cars. Still other cars will be filled with the hydraulic mounts, the smaller guns, and all sorts of ordnance stores and supplies, making up a complete train, run through from Washington to San Francisco without being broken. All the cars are equipped with airbrakes, and it is expected very little time will be

NAPOLEON IVES AT WORK.

The Young Speculator Said to Be Planning a Coup in Ohlo Southern.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Aug. 17. - Superintendent W. H. Van Tassel, of the Ohio Southern, resigned to-night after service dating almost from the inception of the road. He will be succeeded by William Ramsey, late of the C., H. V. & T., and a brother of General Manager Ramsey, of the Big Four. The rumor that Henry S. Ives has a hand in the Southern Ohio pie is again revived by the resignation of Superintendent Van Tassel, and it is asserted that President Saul represents Ives' interest in the road. Ives bought up the block of stock unloaded by Fairbanks, Sully and Greaves.

Ives believes the road has great possibiliies, and he will extend it to the river and also to the north, possibly to Lima, where it will tap the great iron arteries to Chicago. This of itself would boom the stock and scare the Big Four, which would probably pay heavily for a lease of the road.
