

A CHANGE OF VIEWS.

The President Not Compelled to Dwell on the Force Bill Issue in His Letter of Acceptance.

The South to Be Left to Split Itself on the Third Party Rock.

DELIGHT OVER PLATT'S STATEMENT

FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT. WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—While much interest is manifested to learn the contents of the President's letter of acceptance, the public are denied that privilege this evening, though the important campaign document is generally known to be on the electric wires on the way to the millions of readers of the morning papers of the country.

The public only know in a general way that the major part of the letter is devoted to finance tariff and reciprocity, and that the election bill rock has been pretty safely cleared of.

One of the Cabinet officials who had access to the letter said to THE DISPATCH correspondent, to-day, that there is no doubt the attitude of the President, judging from the utterances in his letter upon the force bill matter, have undergone a marked change since his letter of four years ago and his message of two years ago, when he urged the enactment of a rigorous Federal law for the protection of the polls from the fraud and intimidation that were then rife in the South.

Revolution of Sentiment. "But," added the Cabinet minister, "that was some time ago and sentiment on the question has almost been revolutionized in the interval. If there were an absolute certainty of its passage I do not believe that Mr. Reed or Mr. Tilden, or the leaders of the advocates of the force bill two years ago, would now introduce a bill of the character of the Lodge bill. The sold South is practically broken up. The Democratic party of that section is forever and its best hope being the Republic of the South and of the whole country can do to assist to make the break in the ranks as complete and as great as possible, and in the strife of the Democrats to-day with the Democrats of yesterday, secure the desirable division in the ranks of the colored people that must come before the voters of that race can enjoy a free ballot and an honest count. I have been giving special attention for some time to the great revolution that is in progress in the South, and I plainly foresee that the third party movement, while it may not, at once help the Republicans, it will eventually accomplish much that the Republican party started out to do and failed largely through a mistaken generosity.

Contin't Be Wholly Ignored.

"Of course the President could not wholly ignore the subject, but in view of the conditions that now obtain, he was justified in modifying his former strong utterances, and in so doing he will be more nearly in line with the general sentiment of the best elements of his party than he was when he favored the enactment of a force bill, which measure was opposed by the broadest men and the broadest newspapers of the whole country."

"I think that the letter, as a whole," concluded the member of the Cabinet, "will be esteemed by those who intelligently read it as one of the most careful, most convincing, most forcible and most statesmanlike papers of his kind that has ever been given to the country. While it is a justification of the administration during the tenure of Mr. Harrison, and a commendation of the great principles of the Republican party, it is also the deliverance of a man who feels that he is now the President of the whole people, and not merely the representative of and advocate of party dogma."

Delight Over Platt's Statement. There was hearty congratulation of each other among the Republicans in the departments and out of them to-day on account of the apparently "official" announcement by Senator Platt that while his affection for President Harrison may not have increased to an astonishing extent, his love for the grand old party had asserted itself and he would do his best to succeed, notwithstanding the line that had been drawn between him and the Republicans who are in the classified service of the Government, and therefore protected in their positions, are glad, those who are not thus happily conditioned are sorry to see the President's letter, and the prodigal and that one the great New York prodigal, whose repentance means that success is now to be made probable where it was problematic.

The officials who are not in the classified service have nothing to hope from the success of retaining their positions except the success of the party to which they belong. If Harrison wins they may succeed in retaining their positions, but if Cleveland wins they will, every mother's son of them, be given to the gullotine as fast as their places can be supplied. The slaughter will begin with the highest, as a new administration loves to pick out a shining mark for death.

Every grand of Hap-Grasped. Cabinet officers will depart with the President on March 4. Assistant secretaries will pass away a few days later, and in rapid turn heads of bureaus and chiefs of divisions will follow on the mournful journey. Consequently, every new ground for hope is seized upon by those who hold these precarious offices with a pleasure that cannot be described, and one would have thought to-day from the expressions of delight of the one official that was wanting to complete the happiness of this unexpected class was the declaration of Mr. Platt that he would use his best ingenuity to bring about Republican success in the great pivotal State of New York.

At the headquarters of the People's party Editor Dunning held away, and he swept the matter aside with the cynical remark that the very fact of the existence of the breaches between these big politicians is proof that the chief thing that they care after is the offices or the control of official patronage, and the rejoicing of the high officials in the departments was proof that about all the interest they had in the matter was to keep their offices. Principle was a secondary consideration. It was only a question of a short time when all of these patronage brokers and office-seekers and servants of monopolists and the money power would be swept aside by the ability of the great mass of people. It seems, therefore, that the big guns of all of the parties are pretty well satisfied with the "situation."

AUDITING IN ALLEGHENY.

Mr. Bigger's Report on the Accounts of Treasurer MacFerron. The Allegheny Auditing Committee met last evening and received the first report from Auditor Bigger since his election. He said that the committee might like to have a report on all the auditing work done during the past year, but this could not well be made out without the book containing all the reports and schedules. This book was in the possession of the Chairman of the committee, Dr. Gillford. This hint to the doctor met with no response. Since his election Mr. Bigger said he had examined the books of Treasurer MacFerron. He found only clerical errors, amounting to $200, and they had been corrected. He pointed out a few slight flaws in the methods of bookkeeping, and said that the Treasurer had lost about $300 during 1891 by taking in counterfeit coin. The report was received by John Ogden, who prints the ordinances, was requested to attend the next meeting of the committee, to straighten out the accounts for such printing.

DIQUESSA COLLEGE OPENING.

A New Department Opening. Duquesne College certainly had a very successful opening last evening, the large hall being filled by its many patrons and friends. Quite an elaborate and fine program was given, consisting of addresses by Judge Sigle, Dr. Cole, of Allegheny, recitations by Miss Alma Krueger, Miss Addie Clark, and musical numbers by Prof. Morris Stephens, Miss Sadio Ritts, Miss Olive Beach, Miss Bichie Carter, and Miss Barry. The President, Dr. Wood, stated among other things that enrollment this year for the first day was more than double of last year. The large audience was then given the freedom of the college apartments, and to examine the display of work in the art department, just added to the college, and under the direction of Miss Lillian Blanchard. Another feature of Dr. Wood's address was the effect that the college did not pride itself in advertising specialists as teachers, but those who were broad in culture, and who having gone through a college course, with long added experience, and most earnest conduct in their chosen vocation, honestly earned the titles they bear.

From Rev. Dr. R. L. Miller. Last April, after examining many different kinds of instruments, my wife and I selected one of your Conover pianos. We were well satisfied with our choice at the time, and we desire to state now that we are more and more pleased with the instrument as time goes by; larger acquaintance with it only increases our pleasure in it. For roundness, sweetness and fullness of tone, in upper, lower and middle registers alike, we are sure the instrument is not excelled. Truly yours, R. L. MILLER, August 18, 1890. Minister and Editor, To E. Klobber & Bro., agents for Conover pianos.

COLLIS BARDITT SIGHTED.

An Old Neighbor Found Their Camp, but the Sheriff Failed to Get Them. VIVALTA! CAL!, Sept. 5.—Evans and Sontag, the Collis' train robbers, were found yesterday near the residence of Supervisor Ellis, 20 miles north of here, by two of Ellis' children. The men were camped not 100 yards from the house. The children returned to the house and had their aunt go with them, and when she saw Evans she exclaimed: "How are you, Chris?" Evans turned to Sontag and said, "We may as well go to the house now," which they did. The two robbers stayed at the house from noon until dark, when they took a cart and horse of Ellis' and started away. After the robbers left, a man came to town and informed Sheriff Key, who immediately went to Goshen to meet the South-bound train at Selma and intercept the men. Not finding the men, the Sheriff returned this morning and took a team to Ellis' house. Striking the trail, he followed it several miles toward the city, where the trail was lost.

We will have 275 prisoners sojourning over the night. The Criminal Court, as soon as it gets well under way, will rid us of them, but there are always others coming to take the vacant places."
