CURED BY 'A RELIC.

A Society Woman, Feeble, Worn and Wrinkled, Restored to Health.

Her Flesh Like That of a Young Girl; Her Hearing Restored.

REMARKABLE RECOVERY OF A DEVOTEE

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.] NEW YORK, Sept. 19. - When the relie of St. Ann was brought to this city last May, it was placed in the little church of St. Jean Baptiste in East Sixty-fifth street. The relic, which consisted of a piece of the forearm, was on its way to Ste. Anne De Beaupre, in charge of a French-Canadian priest. When it was thus placed temporarily in Father Tetreaus' custody, he took it first of all to Mrs. Rhoda White to be venerated. Mrs. White lives at No. 31 East Sixty-third street.

For many years she has aided Monseigneur Bernard O'Reilly in his labors in all lands. She is a woman of assured social position, the widow of a jurist eminent in his day; her wealth is large and her charities are generous and widely scattered. It need hardly be said that Mrs. White is a devout and earnest Roman Catholic. For 11 years Mrs. White had been deaf; she could only hear, with effort, the shouting of a high-pitched voice. Seven years ago, while so-journing in Dublin, she was stricken down with the grip. It sapped her strength and left her an old woman, feeble, worn, wrinkled and broken. For seven years she was possessed of the disease.

Last spring, when she was brought to this country, her friends and family thought it was to die. She could only walk a few steps; she grew feebler; for weeks she did not leave her bed.

Her Condition Was Desperate.

These facts came to the knowledge of the writer, for he called on her a number of times during that period for the purpose of interviewing her on another matter. Her physicians, her friends, her servants did not think she would ever leave her bed. And withal, Mrs. White had passed the allotted score of years-three score and ten.

The priest brought her the relic of the tore-prin of St. Ann to be venerated. It is best to tell what followed in the words of Mon-seigneur O'Reilly, prefacing his statement by saying that he is a learned priest and, as well, a cultured man of the world. He is one of the best known English writers of his church, and for years has had a roving commission from the Pope to pursue his studies in all parts of the world. He has traveled widely and written wisely and well; his testimony—even on a matter that passes into the supernatural—cannot be lightly be waived aside.

"At the time the relie was first brought to her to be venerated," Dr. O'Reilly said, "Mrs. White was in truly a desperate condition. The next morning she would not rest till she had been taken to the church of St. Jean Baptiste. She walked downstairs with extreme difficulty; we drove the rest of the way. She remained all day to the church in spite of her extreme wask. in the church in spite of her extreme weak ness, and she persisted in doing the same every one of the following days up to Sun-day, the 8th of May. Nothing could take her away from what she felt to be the sensible presence of St. Ann and that of our Lord, working, as she said, so visibly on the bedies and souls of the constantly succeed-ing multitude, who came thither to venerate the relic of the arm which had held and caressed the mother of God, and who re-mained to pray so fervently to that God

The Miracle Was Performed.

"She spent four days in the church?" "Yes," Dr. O'Reilly continued, "and on that night of May 8 she was taken back to her apartments perfectly prostrated and suffering intensely, so she said to her two servants as they were preparing her for another sleepless night, "Well, I have asked St. Ann to cure me, if our Lord deems it best. But I feel as if death were near, and may His holy will be done." For months no prescription of her physicians availed to nllny the terrible insomnia, which was fast threatening her reason. Her deafness, too, had increased to a most painful degree.
Still, wonderful to relate, no sooner did she, that same night, lay her head on her millow than she fell into a sleep as sweet as an infant's. She awoke only with the dawn, rang for her maid, and cried out:
'Oh, Mary, I am cured! I am cured! I see neither pain nor ache, and I can hear all the voices and sounds of the street.' Of course I was astonished, and could not sufficiently thank God and St. Ann. Ever since Mrs. White has enjoyed marvelous health, in spite of her often overtaxing her

Mrs. White is rather above the average height of women; a trifle stout; seemingly in perfect health; you would take her for a woman of 50 at the most. It is her face that interests you most-a strong face, cultured, refined, thoughtful; fresh and delicate in color as the face of a young girl, but of all things you notice the expression —it is the face of an exaltee.

The Flesh of a Young Maid.

She says: "Since my cure I have never felt bodily fatigue. I sm capable of exertions that have been impossible to me for a quarter of a century." And then she tells you about her cure; how she lay in the crowded little chapel day after day. Prayed not for her own sake, as she prayed St. Ann to heal her-"if it be God's will, for His glory and for His church."

"I was very sure that it was God's will," she says. "He would beal me—if it was His will. It was not for my sake this great thing was done. What difference could it make whether an old woman lived a few more years? No; it was not for me. It was that God might show a sign to the nations, this wonderful thing was done. Oh, there is a fearful spirit of unbelief in this age. God wrought this miracle as a

As Mrs. White speaks she pushes the lace back from her wrist; it is indeed the lace back from her wrist; it is indeed the plump and rosy flesh of a young girl. You have noticed that she hears you when you speak in a low voice—in a half whisper. You see before you the visible end of this miracle—an old feeble, deaf woman, broken with disease, made young and well, full of vigor and tresh life; and your philosophies, Haeckelian, Spencerian, drop helplessly in nicees.

A MIRACLE OF MODERN DAYS. By an error due to rush of business Saturday evening, the advertisement of Thompson's New York Grocery contained Thompson's New York Grocery contained som- items wrongly priced. Fourteen sacks Amber flour, $4 50, should have been four (4) sacks. Eighteen cans condensed milk, $1 00, should have been eight (8) cans. While Thompson's New York Grocery can sell goods as cheaply as any they cannot perform impossibilities. The erroneous prices quoted were due to no fault of theirs.
