produce in this country. It is, therefore, a tariff. A revenue tariff is a pure tax and is paid by the consumer. Not only is a revenue tariff a tax, but it encourages importations. This kind of a tariff would increase the importations of steel rails, for example. It would open our ports to the manufacturers of all climes and tongues, who would come into competition with our own people. The first result would be to close our factories. It would give the foreigners the advantage in our markets. To close our factories would shut out the workers, and the only place for them to go then would be the farms. This would flood the agricultural districts and would increase farm products without increasing the mouths to eat it. There being no competition here the importer would add the tax, and we would

HIS QUESTIONS ARE ANSWERED. Workmen Wanted to Know How the Tariff Law Had Helped Them.

THE HOMESTEAD AFFAIR DRAGGED IN

The Republican campaign in Western Pennsylvania was opened last evening. Marching clubs arrayed in fancy toggery swarmed in the streets of the two cities, and at the Metropolitan Rink, in the West End, Congressman John Dalzell delivered a speech on the tariff in an enthusiastic audience. The little law-maker is popular with the masses, and he discussed his subject in a simple, but convincing manner. His auditors were mainly workmen and naturally they had some questions to ask about the Homestead trouble. A few were wavering in the faith, though admitting they were Republicans, but after Mr. Dalzell got through with his explanation everybody was satisfied, and they gave three rousing cheers for the Congressman and the Republican ticket. It didn't take the speaker long to pull the wool from the eyes of the millions, whose vision had been clouded a little by the Allegheny troubles this summer. While Mr. Dalzell have to pay it. The consumer would pay the duty. This is the Democratic doctrine, and according to that party is the only kind of tariff needed in the United States. The Democratic platform says by implication that the party doesn't care for the American people.

GETTING DOWN TO WORK. Meeting of the Republican County Committee-Sinking All Small Jealousies for the General Good-Attempts to Be Asked to Fill Vacancies on Election Boards.

The Republican County Committee met at City Hall yesterday, Chairman Griep presiding. The session was short and harmonious. Encouraging reports were made by the several committees. Squire McGeary read the report of Smith Shannon, Esq., of the Committee on Law, citing the work that had been done by the committee in having foreigners naturalized, and urging that this branch of the work be attended to. He also suggested that the courts be appealed to to fill vacancies in election boards, a duty it will be the business of the courts to see to.
