punishment as a result of their 55-round battle. Siddon's lips and rib flesh were slightly swollen and Smith complained of a sore right hand, but that was all. Twenty-five rounds of the contest were an exhibi-tion of Siddons' capacity to take punishment and of Smith's eagerness to administer it, but the pace told on both and the remain-ment and of smith's eagerness to administer it, but the pace cold on both and the remaining rounds were tame, sometimes not a blow being struck for several rounds. Smith was a favorite at odds, ten to four, when the fighting began, and after the tilerd round Siddons' stock dropped from four to two, but subsequently rose.

Large sums of money changed hands on the proposition that the contest would not last 15 rounds. Siddons proved to be a clever, cool headed and a thoroughly fair fighter, while Smith, in eagerness to land frequently, struck blows below the belt and took other unfair advantages, against which Siddons remonstrated good naturedly. Siddons, it was stated, had announced prior to the contest that he would be satisfied with a draw, as he considered Smith a good man and most of his efforts were directed to that the fight proved a disappointment to Smith's friends who had considered the latter good enough to pit against Dixon. The Board of Directors of the California Club, at a meeting next Monday evening, will decide whether the purse will be delivered or the men shall fight again. Fifty-five rounds were fought and a draw declared.

men who navigate on the Ohlo and its tributaries. SECRETARY KELLY, of the Pittsburg Coal Exchange, showed a letter from Major Stickney to a DISPATCH reporter, stating his plans. The Major states that after a careful consideration of the matter he agrees with the majority of towboat pilots in advocating the removal of the dike near to the bank. Major Stickney also intends to have a coalboat channel provided, about 200 feet wide and nearer the Ohlo shore than formerly, that will be very nearly straight and in the middle of the river. The matter is now in the hands of General W. E. Casey, whose decision will soon be made known.
