BLOCKED BY OLD LAWS

From Making Radical Changes in the Lines of the Harbor.

VALUABLE GRANTS MADE BY PENN

Questions to Be Determined by a Conference

PROBABILITY OF MANY LAW SUITS

The statement of United States Engineer John W. Arris that the new harbor lines for the rivers now being prepared by the Government for the two cities when fixed would result in numerous lawsuits for the recovery of land taken by encrosehments made by abutting property owners caused considerable discussion among those interested yesterday. It is looked upon as a good joke by some people, and accepted with fear and trembling by others.

Colonel Roberts, engineer for the Monon gahela Navigation Company, was asked for his opinion on the subject. The Colonel was loath to talk, because he expects to have something to say before the proposed harbor lines are accepted as final, but among other things he said: "The subject is one of very great importance, not only to the interests of navigation, but to riparian owners who have, under the Pennsylvania State laws, or what is to the same effect, the official report of the Commissioners of 1858, extended their claims to low water lines as then established. In my last conversation with Coionel Merrill, under whom the Government surveys were instituted, he stated that as far as possible the new lines would follow the old ones. He seemed to appreciate the legal difficulties which would arise if any empirical lines were to be now drawn in total disregard to rights acquired under the statutes of Pennsylvania.
Will Be Decided at a Conference.

"Of course all the general Government can do or will be likely to attempt is to require of abutting owners that they do nothing to interiere with the freedom of navigation of our rivers. It is only an incidental question with the general Government as to the liability of eneroachments upon our rivers increasing the height of flools, etc. The parties liable to be damaged by such increase in flood heights are the parties most concerned in the determination of such lines. What should be done, and no doubt what will be done, before these lines are finally drawn and pass into the form of a law, is that a conference should be held be-tween the United States, the State, county and city authorities, and the lines then deter-mined upon to be recognized forever as the established harbor limits and high and low established harbor limits and high and low water lines of the rivers in this vicinity. "Harbor lines for Pittsburg should cer-tainly not be prepared in Cincinnat, but in this city, where the people interested could be consulted. The idea of laying out new lines originated with the Chamber of mmerce and it was the intention to have the State do the work, when Colonel Bayne jumped into the breach and introduced a resolution in Congress calling on the Government to do it. My impression is that a hay wagon can be driven through this Con-gressional act in the courts. There is no gressional act in the courts. There is no doubt that the lines laid out by the State would be improved in some places.

A Menace to Navigation. "For example, at lock No. 1 the line drawn is so sharp that a big steamboat that would entirely fill the lock couldn't get through on account of the abrupt curve. I can't imagine what the engineers were thinking about when they drew the line. There are no cases that judges naturally shrink from so much as the determination of riparian rights, for the reason that pre-cedents are few and so many old laws have to be considered. The land grants away back in the time of Penn can't be ignored. If you remember the old pickle factory out Second avenue delayed the Baltimore and Ohio road from coming downtown for five years. In this case Penn had granted the original owner the right to drive his cattle to the low water mark, and a lon-

When United States Engineer Arris was sked if the Government would follow the State harbor lines he said: "I don't know. I don't think anybody knows. It strikes me it would be establishing a bad precedent as the Government is laying out harbor lines in other places, and if the rule was established here people would insist on its adoption elsewhere. I can say that the Pennsylvania harbor lines were not drawn in the interest of navigation. The work was done by a commission in 1858 and politics had a good deal to do with it. At the time the people thought it was a big thing. In some cases the line is inside of the bank, and in other places it is a half mile or more drawn out law suit was based upon this

A Political Possibility.

"Do you mean to intimate that if a politician wanted a certain piece of land the line was fixed to suit him?"

"Well, people can draw their own conclusions. You can see from what I have said that the Government cannot be blamed if the old State lines are not fol-lowed. The harbor lines for Pittsburg and Allegheny will not extend very far beyond the city limits. They will not reach Homestead. If the mill owners in Braddock have filled in, and I understand they have, there will be no redress for the present. The Baltimore and Ohio and Pemickey roads are beyond the State lines in many places. Stretches of both roads a half mile in length or more are inside the limits. I am not sure about the Pittsburg and Western on the Allegheny ride. I think the West Penn is all right.
This road was built in the bed of the old canal which makes the best kind of a track, for the grades as a rule are slight. I know of a number of factories on the Southside where the buildings are located altogether outside of the State lines. The original banks of the rivers have been appropriated and pushed into the stream in many in-stances. The indications are that a number of lawsuits for the recovery of filled-in land will follow the establishment of the

A daughter of Steinitz held the position of organist until a few months ago, when the other side summoned sufficient strength to depose her. After the regular service a meeting was held to choose a successor. Both sides were present in large numbers, and before any action had been taken Steinitz and Groesbeck were engaged in a regular fist fight right under the pupit. This precipitated the general row, pulpit. This precipitated the general row, and the end is not yet.

DEPARTMENT. "Something new for Portieres" has been the cry for the last 10 years. One of the latest arrivals is a REMNANTS INGRAIN, new plain Chenille Portiere, in solid color, with choice of 30 shades. This new fabric is the heaviest and closest known to the trade. Its high lustre and closeness of texture give to it in perfection the play of light called sheen, and the quality of hanging in soft folds, both essential to successful decorative effect in door-hangings and window draperies.

In these respects the new fabric is superior to plain flax velour portieres, generally sold at $13.50 per pair. Our price
