MINSHALL LOCKED UP.

Surrendered Himself to the Police at Monongahela City.

GRIEVING OVER HIS POSITION.

Was a Good Friend of Charles Spriggs, the Dead Elevator Boy.

WILL ASK FOR BAIL AFTER THE VERDICT

Charles Minshall came to this city last night in company with Chief of Police Cleary, of Monongahela City. A telegram from Brownsville yesterday morning notified Superintendent O'Mara that Minshall was at Monongahela City, and a detective was sent up for him.

Minshall is the commercial traveler who, by prematurely starting an elevator at the Hotel Anderson last Saturday, accidentally caused the death of the elevator boy, Charles Spriggs, or DeConroy, as he was better known.

Minshall is greatly worried about the death of Spriggs. He is actually a jolly, good-natured man, but is now cast down, and has little to say except in explanation of the accident.

"No one living regrets this so much as I," he said last night. "I should not have gone away, but I was led to believe poor Charley would recover. When I left I expected to return to Monongahela to see how he was and what could be done for him."

The inquest was begun yesterday. Minshall will be given an opportunity to testify to-day and that will close the case. It is considered certain the jury will return a verdict of involuntary manslaughter.
