CAMPAIGN COMMENT.

Estimates Now Being Made on the Registration in New York.

SENATOR QUAY'S VIEWS ON BETS.

Republicans Receive Bright Reports From the Hoosier State.

CLEVELAND TALKS WITH CONFIDENCE

With but one week until election day, the rival political managers continue to send forth the same confident claims that have marked the canvass for a month past. Now that the registration in New York has been completed a deal of figuring is being done upon the probable vote of the important Empire State. The total below the Harlem is certainly less than the expectations of the Democratic leaders, and the Republicans unquestionably have the right to regard the evident disappointment of their adversaries as a most encouraging development. The Democrats, of course, have an explanation ready. They assert that Tammany has enrolled the full vote of their side and that the falling off must have occurred in some other column. Then, too, they point out that Cleveland won in 1884 when the increase in the vote was comparatively small, and lost in 1888 when the increase was phenomenally large. These statements, though, are all in the nature of excuses, as all the Democratic managers had publicly placed the registration figures in New York city at from 10,000 to 20,000 higher than the returns justify. The indications of the registration in the interior of the State are not such as to add to Democratic hopefulness, either. The strongly Democratic city of Albany shows no increase whatever, while Buffalo, always close, but usually Republican, has an addition of nearly 10,000. The total vote of New York State in 1884 was 1,171,312, and in 1888 reached 1,320,109, an increase of 148,797. That of this year is estimated in round numbers at 1,400,000, an increase of less than 80,000.

Senator Quay is quoted as saying that no Republican need have any fear of the result of the election because of the Democrats offering bets of $1,000 to $750 and $600 that Cleveland will carry New York. "They were betting the same way ten days before the election of 1888," said the Senator, "but in the last week the betting had resumed an equal-sided form, and the only disparity to either side was that the Republicans offered much more money than they could get taken."

Chairman Gowdy, of the Indiana Republican Committee, has issued a congratulatory address to the voters of that State. In it he declares that up to ten days ago the fight for supremacy in Indiana was an even one, though the Democrats had started out with the prestige of their landslide in 1890. Even more apparent than in 1888 is the Republican advance in the closing weeks of the campaign. To-day Indiana is Republican by a good majority. "The true Democratic poll in this State," Mr. Gowdy says, "does not show a plurality for that party. The State will cast its vote for Harrison and Reid. The factors in the contest that have led us to the coming victory are the tariff issues, on which we have stood squarely by the McKinley law, the reciprocity features, honest money and the local taxation issue. The Republican State ticket will be elected as well as the electoral ticket." Congressman M. L. Booth, Democrat, of Missouri, says: "The Republicans have acted shrewdly in this matter. From the first they have been declaring that New York was the pivotal State. They have never believed this. They have no doubt been making the strongest kind of efforts to carry this State, but in addition have been making equally strong efforts to carry the other doubtful States, and Indiana particularly. If they do not carry Indiana I will be surprised, and I attribute it all to the blunders of the Democratic managers in not doing more work there."

The New York Herald says that "Those who think the railroads of the country should be under government control might try the experiment in 1896 by electing Mr. McLeod President. He will probably have most of them under his thumb by that time."

Mr. Cleveland has been interviewed briefly, and naturally expresses the belief that he will be successful next Tuesday. In response to queries he went over the ground of the canvass being made by his friends under the generalship of Harrity and Whitney, and referred to the vast correspondence which he has received from the local leaders in every section of the country. The ex-President remarked confidently: "If such a consensus of opinion from trusted men in the very midst of the contest means anything it is the success of the national Democratic ticket without a doubt. We will not be surprised if we carry Massachusetts. It seems as if our opponents do not understand the situation there. There will be no defection in New Jersey or in Indiana. The Northwest also sends us encouraging accounts, and as for New York, all our lines are compact. We will carry New York. The Republican accounts from Connecticut differ very widely from ours." The ex-President spoke in the most exalted terms of his obligations to ex-Secretary Whitney for the skillful manner in which he managed party affairs from the preliminary movements of the convention down to the present time. "The uncertainty, however, will soon be over. We are not worrying about the result," he said.

Colonel Daniel S. Lamont, who made such a reputation as Mr. Cleveland's Secretary, has been prevented by illness from taking any part in this campaign. He has returned from Europe, however, in time to register and vote, and says that, without any personal knowledge of the situation, he hopes and believes that Cleveland will be elected.

Senator Gorman, who is now assisting the Democrats at national headquarters, makes some confident claims, though not of a rainbow character. He says: "I do not see where our opponents expect to get the majority they are claiming. New York has been carefully canvassed and we feel very certain of carrying the State. The Democratic vote in New York will be very large and cannot be met by any probable majorities from the interior. We will carry Indiana to a certainty. We will carry all the States which belong to us, and, according to our advices, several more. You can make up your mind that the Democratic party will win. All the information we have point that way. We are not conducting our campaign on an extravagant basis. We rely upon the devotion of every Democrat to his party. We are quite certain in this campaign our opponents are expending nine dollars to our one. A campaign dependent upon the expenditure of large sums of money in the end reacts." In referring to Illinois, Senator Gorman did not place much confidence in the large registration in Chicago. He said: "The Vice Presidental candidate on our ticket may have some influence upon the vote of Illinois, but it must not be forgotten that not less than 50,000 men are employed on the public buildings and hotels which are being erected in Chicago under Republican management."

The New York Press is authority for the statement that in a private conversation a few days ago Bourke Cockran said: "I am satisfied that it doesn't make very much difference to the country, and I sometimes think it will not to the Democratic party, whether Harrison or Cleveland is elected, and there are a good many other Democrats who are of my opinion."

Benjamin H. Bristow, who was Secretary of the Treasury under Grant, and who contested for the Presidental nomination in the Republican Convention of 1876, has since that time resided most of the time in the city, where he is practicing law, with a large clientage, and he has been strongly suspected of mugwumpism. This year, however, he is out for Harrison and Reid. "I am not in political life," he says, "but I intend to vote for President Harrison. I think the Democratic platform in regard to the tariff is revolutionary, and if carried into effect would bring disaster to the commercial and business interests of this country. The era of prosperity now existing would be suddenly checked and a period of depression would follow which would be far reaching in disastrous results. Personally, I like Mr. Cleveland, but he stands upon the Democratic National platform, and he represents it. His election would certainly create alarm in industrial and commercial circles."

What will happen when a man of destiny meets one who is fore-ordained to win?

WANT A LICENSE TRANSFERRED.

Attorney Yost Appears in a Liquor Case in Court Yesterday.

A hearing was had before Judge Kennedy yesterday on the application for a transfer of the retail-liquor license of Peter Koch, of McKeesport, to Jacob Wagner. W. J. Brennen appeared in behalf of the application, while Attorney Yost opposed the transfer. Mr. Yost claimed that the transfer was a matter of speculation; that Koch was making money out of it, which the law did not contemplate. He also asserted that Wagner was not known by many of those who signed his petition recommending him, Wagner living in the Fifteenth ward, Pittsburg, heretofore, and the signers in McKeesport. Mr. Yost held the petition in his hand and then asked Wagner to name some of those who had signed it. Wagner could name but three out of the 22 on it.

Wagner, however, had a number of reputable citizens present to vouch for his good character. Among them was Senator Upperman.

A Prayer Rug.

"I know not when in Daghestan
He lived—the skilful artisan,
Who wove, in some mysterious way,
This fabric where the colors play
Across the woof in rainbow chase
Or meet and link and interlace.
* * * * * * *
"But this I know—foot ne'er shall press
Its worship-hallowed loveliness,
For still about it dumbly clings
A subtle sense of holy things;
And woven in the meshes there
Are strands of vow and shreds of prayer."

Oriental Rugs as a rule come to this country in great bales. They are sorted by experts. The commoner kinds, the poorer qualities and the defective Rugs are tossed aside to be disposed of in the auction rooms or to the wandering rug peddlers, who make the circuit of the American cities, never expecting to see their customers a second time. To one who is unwary in these things it is very easy to be woefully deceived in buying from irresponsible dealers.

It would startle the crafty turbaned merchants of the bazars of Cairo and Constantinople to see our large stock of Oriental rugs, every one marked at an unvarying price.

After thoroughly clearing out our old stock of rugs, we have opened a new assortment three or four times larger than ever before shown in Pittsburg.

They cover a wide range of sizes, prices and nationalities, and are marked at a close margin of profit.

We show many large room rugs or carpets in novel colorings and exqvisite designs harmonizing with modern schemes of coloring and interior decoration.

Special attention is requested to a large number of Daghestan Rugs, both antique and modern, in hearth sizes, at $7, $10, $12, $15.
