

THE CITY SHOUTS ALL NIGHT LONG. A Surging Sea of Fervid Humanity Ebbs and Flows in a Mighty Tide. ANXIOUS AND EXCITED

Thousands Watch the Bulletin Board for the Latest Returns.

The Toot of the Tin Horn Triumphant and All Sorts of Discord-Breeding Instruments Crash Together—The Democrats Naturally Do Most of the Cheering, but Everybody in Good Humor—How the News Was Received Down-Town—Fantastic Costumes of the Victors—Night Scenes That Show How Pittsburgh Has Grown Since the Last Presidential Election.

The storm burst over the city as soon as supper was cleared away. Dark clouds of humanity began to roll up from all sides, an ominous murmur deepened speedily into a tremendous roar, the deafening din of the tin horns gathered volume every minute, until before 8 o'clock the streets down-town were hidden by dense masses of eager, howling partisans, from whose lungs and mechanical organs rose a grand chorus of cheers and blasts of unearthly music.

The magnets for the greatest crowds were, of course, the newspaper offices, and the most powerful attraction of all was the big calcium light bulletin of THE DISPATCH.

Upon a white curtain hung from the second story of Solomon & Ruben's the returns were flashed every few seconds across the street.

Smithfield street from the DISPATCH office.

They were the earliest returns in the city and the most accurate. Smithfield street at this point presented an extraordinary appearance from the time the first bulletin was shown till far into the night.

The crowd stretched two-thirds of a block each way on Smithfield street and as far up Diamond street as a glimpse could be had at the bulletin.

The Republicans had their noisiest innings when their victory in West Virginia was posted up. As the situation developed the Democrats apparently increased in number, but it was a very good-natured crowd anyhow, and whatever the moral of news changed to be the tin-horn and the lusty yell saluted it impartially.

In the course of three or four hours' wanderings among the crowds the only case of drunkenness noted involved a boy of 16 or 17, who had grown melancholy over surreptitious cups.

After the Democrats were dead certain that they had won the day they put on all sorts of wildly triumphant masquerading attire, and singly, in squads and regiments marched up and down the streets.

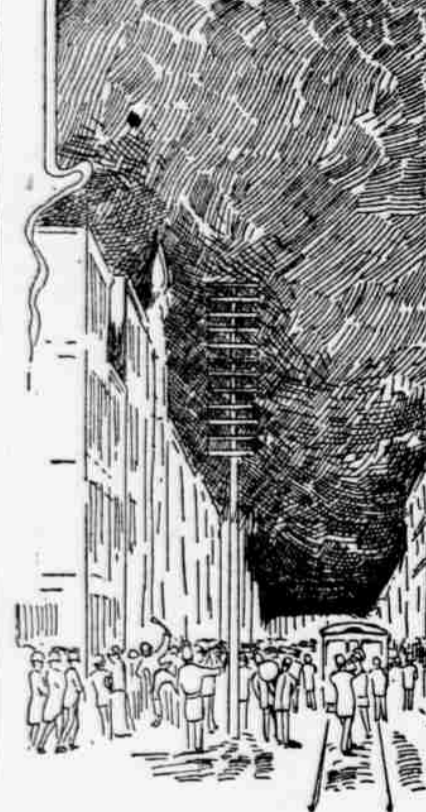

So it went on for hours, the roar of the excited populace ebbing and flowing, but never dying away entirely. A burst of cheers now meant that our grand old commonwealth was at least true to her gods, and now that some far Western State had slipped away from its old-time moorings.

The deafening uproar on the streets, made horrible by the tin horn, the cow bell and other playful implements of distress, did not disturb the serene serenity of the city theaters and every amusement place in Pittsburgh was literally crowded with people who were content to applaud the pleasing election news from comfortable seats after they had wearied of applauding the entertaining actors.

crowd seemed to roll in waves and then surge back again. The sensation of riding in one of those cars through the crowds was very odd. So great was the pressure of the mob as it was squeezed back that the car seemed actually to be lifted off the tracks.

But, though the mightiest mobs were congregated on Smithfield street and Fifth avenue, and the blockade of the way from Wood street to Market was as complete as in the other direction, there was not a street nor an alley in either of the two cities that did not have a contingent of horn-blowers, a bouffon or a drum corps to keep the inhabitants alive to the fact that the most exciting Presidential election had been decided.

A Hopeless Search for Peace. The philosopher in search of a peaceful spot would have had a harder time than Diogenes for an honest man. One would have thought that mid-stream in the Allegheny would have been comparatively calm, but at 8 o'clock there was a band of a dozen youths with cow bells, horns and a bass drum in the center of the Sixth street bridge, while three cold-defying mariners in a row-boat sent up discordant blasts from the water below.

Looking down the hill from Cherry alley the avenue seemed to be packed about as solid as far as Liberty street. From this majestic concourse—for in such numbers a crowd takes on majesty—arose such an ear-splitting, nerve-destroying uproar as surely never Pittsburgh heard before.

Not only men but thousands of women were there, and a tidy sprinkling of children. The Italian newbies, with a delegation of young colored boys, held high carnival all by themselves on Virgin alley, dancing around a big bouffon which they kept burning all the evening near the Cherry alley corner.

Democracy Masqueraded in Triumph. After the Democrats were dead certain that they had won the day they put on all sorts of wildly triumphant masquerading attire, and singly, in squads and regiments marched up and down the streets.

Some fitted paper roosters over their hats, others armed themselves with brooms, and the miniature fowls came out in force as an emblem of victory. A corps of enthusiasts, about 50 strong, with roosters for headgear, and bearing billiard cues for wands of office created a sensation downtown.

The Opera House was crowded to the street. The Duquesne was filled almost to overflowing. Standing room was at a premium at the Alvin and the Bijou was taxed to its utmost to accommodate its patrons. Harry Davis' and Harris' Museums and Harry Williams' Theater were uncomfortably full and from the stage of each of these resorts the election returns, supplied by special wires, were read and applauded to the echo.

It was a great night for the theaters, and under the circumstances it was a great night for all those who attended them.

All the Prominent Republicans Gather in the Fire-Alarm Office and Wait for Returns. Cold Comfort in the Figures—The Democrats Near-by.

The regular crowd of Republicans and Democrats gathered in the fire alarm office last evening to hear the returns.

Congressman Daisel sat at the head of the Republican table with a worried look on his face. His fingers twitched nervously as the reports from the county came in slowly.

Around the table were Chairman Gripp, Secretary George Miller, Chief Bigelow, Senator Neeb, Senator Flinn, C. L. Magee and other leaders. Chairman Gripp read the returns, and they didn't give the crowd much comfort. Somebody early in the evening asked for news from Alabama. C. L. Magee joined in the laugh that followed. Then he left the room, and was gone for several hours.

Early in the evening several election boards called up the fire alarm office for instructions about counting the vote. This was an indication that the work would be tedious, and little definite could be expected before midnight.

The Democrats occupied the room to the right of the fire alarm office. They were very enthusiastic. A. F. Keating seemed to be the leading spirit. About 10 o'clock C. L. Magee thought Cleveland would have a majority of over 100,000 in New York and Brooklyn.

AT DEMOCRATIC HEADQUARTERS.

A Large, Loud Crowd, Hears of Victory and Then Goes Wild. The crowd at Democratic headquarters was louder than it was large. A special wire had been engaged and all the information of the country was received there just as promptly as it was received at any other point in the city.

Very Few Arrests Made. Owing to the diligence of the police and the precautions taken by them to prevent any street disturbances of a serious nature last night, very few arrests were made.

Students Hold an Election. Duquesne College students at 3 o'clock yesterday held an election. Prof. Gordon acted as judge. They had a full board of officers, booths and a large ballot box, and everything was conducted according to the new order.

Very Quiet in Allegheny. Allegheny was quiet last night. No returns were received at City Hall. At the headquarters of the Allegheny Central Republican Club a small crowd had collected, but the returns came in very slowly.

Manfield in the Scarlet Letter. Richard Manfield produced "The Scarlet Letter" last night at the Alvin Theater to an audience that filled every inch of standing room as well as all the seats.

Princess Margaret's Bridal Veil. Five hundred hands are at work on the bridal veil of the Princess Margaretha, of Prussia. The veil is made of 500 different pieces, all the work being done with the needle, and the pieces, each of which requires ten days for completion, are to be patterned by the most skillful lacemakers in a job which will appear as the work of the same hand.

The Feathers of the Ostrich. In each wing of an ostrich 26 long, white plumes grow to maturity in eight months. In the male these are pure white, while those of the female shade to eury or gray.

THE VOTE BY PRECINCTS IN PITTSBURGH AND ALLEGHENY CITY IN DETAIL.

QUEERED BY THE NEW LAW. Election Officers Find Considerable Difficulty in Counting. RETURNS COME IN VERY SLOWLY. County Chairman Gripp Kept Busy Answering Inquiries, BUT THE VOTERS LIKE THE NEW SYSTEM.

The election in the two cities and as much of the country as has been heard from passed off as quietly as was consistent with the very lively interest manifested. It was evident soon after the polls closed that the returns would be very slow coming in. The Baker ballot law worked all right as far as the voting itself was concerned, the voters generally expressing their approval of the new system; but when it came to counting things didn't go so smoothly.

Chairman Gripp was kept at the telephone all the evening answering the inquiries of election officers who were puzzled about their duties under the new law.

TENNYSON'S TENDER HEART. Two Instances Cited That Do Great Honor to the Dead Poet. Chicago Post.] A man who for several years a gardener and coachman for Tennyson, Martin Donovan by name, and living in Philadelphia now, relates two instances of the poet's tender-heartedness. Once Donovan's wrist was badly cut with a sickle by a fellow workman, and Tennyson gave the case his personal attention and bound up the wound with his own hands.

MANY BEGGARS IN MALTA.

MANY BEGGARS IN MALTA. The Natives Make a Regular Business of It and Are Very Successful. Chicago Tribune.] Beggars swarm so in Malta that, according to the Rev. J. E. Hard's sketch of Maltese life, the only way to avoid being pestered by them is to put out the hollow of your hand and anticipate them with their own whining "Give me something," "Me plenty poor man," "Me very large family." Some of these beggars are supposed to have acquired a good deal of money, and it is said that the priests order people to live by begging for a while as penance. On the other hand, with those who will work it hard to do business owing to their reluctance to name a price for their services. The answer is: "What you like," which tempts the stranger to reply that he "would like to give nothing at all."

Another cause is that small birds do not make their journeys in one flight. They generally rest during the day, searching for food, and thus proceed to their destination by easy stages.

STRENGTH OF A BIRD'S WING.

STRENGTH OF A BIRD'S WING. The Smaller Travelers Are Often Carried on the Back of the Old. Brooklyn Eagle.] The muscles of a bird's wing are particularly strong in proportion to the weight of its body. As a rule, small birds that have come very far across the sea have been blown over the water during violent gales, and many of them arrive on land in a half-dead condition. One reason for the fact that in fair weather small and weak birds make long journeys successfully over considerable tracts of ocean is that they are carried on the backs of the larger ones.

FLAGS INAPPROPRIATELY BLENDED.

FLAGS INAPPROPRIATELY BLENDED. The Colors of France and Russia Printed on the Same Cloth. It is perhaps a good thing for the world that France should remain a republic, but it is a decidedly bad thing for humanity that she should do so at the expense of all that has made her glorious in the eyes of the nations. A Paris correspondent to Five Russia writes: "A feature of this year will be the display of the new Franco-Russian flag, which has been named 'The Crossed.' The colors of France and Russia are printed on the same piece of cloth, and according to the Paris correspondent, the flags are sold in the shops with the warranty 'that the colors will last forever, like the friendship of the two nations.'"

SOMETHING ABOUT ARCTURUS.

SOMETHING ABOUT ARCTURUS. There are other suns in space that are infinitely larger than the one which gives us heat, light and life. The star Arcturus, which is known to be a sun for a far-way system of planets, is 11,500,000 times further removed from us than is our solar luminary. His diameter is 71,000,000 and his circumference about 224,000,000 miles. Our sun is but 865,000 miles in diameter, a fact which proves that Arcturus is at least 55,000 times greater in bulk than is our "great orb of day."

FLIES GETTING FULL ON DRUNKARDS.

FLIES GETTING FULL ON DRUNKARDS. Close observers have noticed that flies will gather upon a half drunken, sleepy sot, while a dozen sober men in the same room are not molested by them. The flies will buzz around their object with great delight, frequently alighting upon his perspiring face. Off they go and return again and again, quaffing the alcoholic nectar issuing from his pores. After a while their flight becomes uncertain and eccentric, and sometimes they come in collision.
