THE WORST PROBABLY TO COME.

Depressing Iffect of the Imperor's Speech to the Landtag.

THE COMING SOCIALISTS' CONGRESS

THY CABLE TO THE DISPATOR.1

BERLIN, Nov. 13. - [ Copyright. ]-The lack of pomp and enthusiasm at the opening of the Prussian Landtag has had a depressing effect upon the people of all parties. The white room of the royal palace is still in repair, and the Deputies, therefore, were on Wednesday crowded into the Rittersasl. The Emperor was in Stettin, attending the swearing-in of naval recruits. He was represented by Count Botho zu Eulenberg, Prussian Minister President. Reporters were not admitted to the room. But few members of the Prussian Ministry were Count Botho zu Eulenberg read the speech from the throne. The speech, apparently, was badly written, for the Minister President hesitated and repeated himself trequently, and, altogether, made a hardly less painful impression than did the speech itself. The burden of the Emperor's words was that Prusssan finances were depressed, and reforms would be necessary to correct the unsatisfactory condition of the budget. The speech forecast the increase of the salaries among the teachers in the common schools, but otherwise was calculated to give little hope to any person or class of persons in the kingdom.

A Hard Time to Balance Accounts. There seems to be little doubt that Prussia, so long the model State of Europe from a financial point of view, will now have considerable difficulty in balancing her accounts. The temporary expedient of a loan will not do much good, and, although Miquel's property and income taxes will accomplish much eventually through the growing wealth of the country, they are hardly to be counted upon for relief for the need of the immediate future.

The had impression made by the speech from the throne has been a boon to the Richters and Rickerts and Liebtnechts, whose political il e consists in opposing everything proposed by the Government. It has also encouraged the Clericals and Conservatives to begin anew the campaign avainst the military bill. The result is a display of facetiousness and antaronism for its own sake, such as only German politics its own sake, such as only German politics

The opinion grows that Count Von Caprivi will be unable, in the coming season of the Reienstar, to swim against the stream, as he ence promised to do. Just now he has the ence promised to do. Just now he has the leaders of all the parties and their manifold group declaring against him that the military bill is impossible; that its demands for money are exorbitant, and that, even with an extensive compromise, it is hopelessly in the minority. Although these declarations must be taken with a grain of salt, as far as the Conservatives and Clericals and many of the National Liberals are concerned, there is little doubt that the imperial whip must be swaug vigorously before a coalition can be got together behind the bill.

An Embarrassment for the Government. opinion grows that Count Von Caprivi

An Embarcassment for the Government. The Government would be embarrassed by seeking relief from its present predica nt in a new election by the popular hulls ballo raised against the bill by the Freisinnice and Social Democrats. The Conservative Post has directed the Government's attention to this state of nffnirs without any mineing of words. Such an appeal to the country, the Postsays, would be fatal to Caprivi's plans. The Government professed to believe that a new Reichstag would be more tractable than the present one. This assumption was a mistake. Knowledge of the details of the bill had been proved before the whole properly anneath. spread before the whole people since the Coclaische Zeitung had revealed the bill, and hardly a national or local leader had spoken a word in favor of the Government's attitude. The enormous additional cost of the ill's provisions had already condemned it in nions of the electors. Under the cir nces, a dissolution would be a piece of political fatuity.

Among the many other disagreeable surprises for the Government in a Reichstag closen on the issue of the military bill would be a large increase in the number of Social Democratic deputies.

Miquel's property tax bill, intended to complement his former tax bills, is less radical than the Prussian capitalists had apprehended. The first step in his plan is a tax of 2 marks on a capital of 6,800 marks. The successive steps accord with every capital increase of 2,000 marks, the added tax for every step being 1 mark. for every step being I mark.

The New Tax Very Unpopular. Like the income tax, the new property tax is to be administered according to the selfassessment principle, but extra powers of assessment principle, but extra powers of administration in certain cases are granted to collectors. Those latter provisions are likely to make the new tax excessively un-popular. Bismarck's organ in Hamburg-even goes so far as to maintain that they render the tax unconstitutional, as the Prussian constitution prohibits to close inissian constitution prohibits too close in-sition into a person's private affairs. he property subject to the proposed tax the real and personal property except-real property outside of Prussia, the rising capital in mines and arriculture, ischold furniture and household effects, e amount of rateable property in Prussia die to the tax, after exempting the above autoned list, and the capital under 6,000 riss, which remains free, is estimated to 2,000,000,000 marks.

This tax, its adiments contend, has, like the income tax, the great advantages of the income tax, the great advantages of growing rapidly from year to year with the country's prosperity and the treasury's needs, and bearing most heavily apon those best able to pay it. The bill is believed to have a good chance to pass without material ns, despite the |net that Miquel has niterations, despite the fact that Miquel has never been very hopeful of it.

The expected proposals of the Imperial Government for new taxes within which to pave the way of the new military bill will hardly be so well received as has been Miquel's property tax bill. The opposition to Caprivi's tobacco tax plan increases delix.

A Protest Against Tobacco Growers Among the latest protests is one from the manufacturers of Duisburg, who employ thousands of men, and last year worked up between 6,000,000 and 7,000,003 pounds of raw between 6,000,000 and 5,000,000 pounds of raw material. Their protest is especially strong against the psoposal of German tobacco growers that the weight of the increased revenue should rest on the shoulders of the men handling imported tobacco. The im-port duty on impogled tobacco, they say, is already hurdenseme enough, and if political reasons require more revenue from tobacco, the domestic article should be made to bear its full share of the new tax.

the domestic article should be minde to bear its full share of the new tax.

The Social Democratic Congress, to be held here this week, casts already before it the shadows of internal strike. The organ of the Executive Committee is publishing notices of motions which will be brought up for discussion and vote. The tenor of many motions already published indicates that the perennial question of the Social Democracy's attitude toward religion is to cause fresh disturbance among the delegates. The tide of opinion seems to be against the former resolution to the effect that a Social Democrat's religion ts his private affair, and syerial motions have already been proposed to cancel it. This would border clussly upon the old issue of the "Massenaustrit ans der Landskirche."

If the advocates of infidelity fall of their

If the advocates of infidelity fail of their To the advocates of inductivistic of their most radical purposes they will endeavor to obtain from the Congress a pronunciamento against religion as far as it inter eres with education and hinders the liberation of manking from economics and political

Leaders Accused of Dishonesty

The fight against the Executive Commiteg is foreboded in several motions suggesting lack of confidence in Bebei, Singer and Hebbasecht, who are accused of dishonesty in conducting the party press—especially the central organ, the Vorworts—of nepotion and or using the party machinery despondently for their own glorification before the masses of Social Democrats. The reseists of the party from contributors in all parts of the world are represented to have been spent injudiciously, and the Vorworts is said to have lost force and courage in the Social Democratic cause to such an extent that it should be replaced by another and houre aggressive newspaper.

Several Social Democrats living in London and Switzerland suggest that a weekly newspaper would serve the needs of the party is well as would a daily and at less expasses. As the central organ of the party is not a newspaper, according to the general interpretation of the term, but merely a ten is foreboard in several motions suggest-publication intended to shed a Social Democratic light on the political and economic events of importance, this suggestion has been received with considerable approval.

About a dozen delegates to the Congress have been instructed by their constituents to vote for the illustration of the sainries of party officials to 2,500 marks annually,

A Revolt Not Hard to Squelch. Among the other subjects to be discussed will be the literature sent out by the execu-

Among the other subjects to be discussed will be the literature sent out by the executive committee, the propaganda of Social Democracy among the young men of the Empire, and female suffrage. Persons familiar with the organization of the party, while expecting much noise from the malcontents, believe that the threatened revolt against the executive committee will be squelched as easily as at former Congresses. The Berlin leaders and their partisans are too commetly organized to leave their opponents much chance of ousting the existing powers. The most threatening danger to the old North German leaders would come from a reviral of the Vollmar-liebknecht quarrel. Vollmar, and Vollmar alone, of all the Social Democratic leaders outside of the North German coterie, is a sufficiently pewerful party boss and a sufficiently pready debater to crowd Bebel, Liebknecht, Singer and Auer into a close corner. Should the old fight against his patriotism and his supposed opportunism be revived, as it may be, the North Germans will be put to their utmost to save at once their influence and the integrity of the party.

The Independents Also to Meet.

The Independent Social Democrats, ied by Werner, the printer, and Wildberger, the upholsterer, will also meet this week. These men second from the regular organization men seceded from the regular organization after the Erfurt Congress, and now claim great strength. Just how fruitful their agitation has been can be estimated only after the assembling of their representatives. As yet, preparations for their Congress have attracted little attention.

Under the English headline, "Made in Great Britain," the Coclaische Zeitung publishes a plea for a bill to protect German merchandise marks. "Since England passed her merchandise marks act in 1837," adds the Coclaische Zeitung, "the words 'Made in Germany,' have been a term of reproach. It is now time that the tables be turned, and that English goods imported into Germany be stamped 'Made in Great Britain."

What is the hideous immorality of which these supersensitive Christians declare the Indian Government guilty? Optum is in India and China what wine and other alcoholic beverages are among our people. It has been employed from time immemorial by oriental races to stimulate, exhilarate or soothe, and no one capable of weighing evidence and without a foregone conclusion to support, can doubt that its moderate use is a recable, harmless and in many cases beneficial. Taken in excess it is undoubtedly mischievous, as drinking, smoking and all sensual pleasures become in similar conditions.
