Each One of the 500 Priests Makes Profession of Faith.

AS TO SCHOOLS AND SECRET SOCIETIES

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.] NEW YORK, Nov. 23 .- Five hundred priests gathered to-day in St. Patrick's Cathedral for the Triennial Synod of the Catholic Archdiocese of New York. The third Plenary Council of Baltimore decreed that a Synod be held every three years by each diocese in the country. The chief object of the Synod is to bring all the priests together, so that their Archbishop or Bishop can talk to them on subjects concerning the welfare of the church.

At 10 o'clock all the priests assembled in the Catholic Orphan Asylum, at Madison avenue and Fifty-first street. They donned cassocks, surplices and berretta, and marched in a body to the cathedral. Shortly after 10 o'clock they were all seated in the pews of the middle aisle. The doors of the cathedral were closed, and during the session no one was allowed to enter the edifice.

Archbishop Corrigan, attended by his Secretary and two priests, entered the sanctuary when the priests were seated. After the preliminaries every priest stood up and walked into the aisie. In single file they approached the altar, and each made a profession of faith, which was done by kissing an open book of gospels.

An Ancient Ceremony Kept Up, This is an ancient ceremony in the Catholic Church, and originated in the time of the early schisms. It was customary then when the clergy met to make every-one swear to his belief in Catholicity. Those who refused to make the profession of faith were considered heretics and were excluded from the councils of the church. When every priest and the Archbishop had made a profession of faith, the Arch-bishop was robed in the long cope and a mitre was placed on his head. Taking the golden cross in his left hand he walked out of the sanctuary accompanied by his at-tendants and ascended the pulpit. It is only at Synods that the Archbishop in cope and mitre speaks from the pulpit. On other occasions he makes his addresses from the

He told his priests that they should be particularly zealous in providing Catholic schools for the children of their parishes. He said the Archbishops who met in conference last week were unanimous in the opinion that the decrees of the third Plenary Council of Baltimore, concerning the should be enforced.

Some Parishes Can't Have Schools

The Archbishop remarked that it was impossible to support a school in some par-ishes. In those cases he urged the priests faithfully to carry out the wishes of the Archbishops, that they provide for the re-ligious instruction of the children who are thus compelled to attend the public schools, and said that he was glad to see that in a half a dozen parishes district schools were building. After the address the priests to assist the Archbishop in the administration of the archdioce for the next three years were named.

In Catholic circles last week's secret meeting of the Archbishops of the country is still discussed. No one can say exactly what took place at the conference. The Inde cudent publishes this week what purports to be a report of the meeting. The article, which is by "A Catholic correspondent," will excite interest in Catholic circles in this city. The writer tells some unings which did not get out while the meeting Satolli, the Papal delegate, made an ad dress to the Archbishops.

Delightfully Clear, Though in Latin. Of this address the writer in the Inde-

Of this address the writer in the Independent says:

Archbishop Satolli's address at the meeting of the archbishops, though delivered in the cumbrous Latin tongue, was beautifully clear. He spoke on the school question. The address covered four leading points: Parochial schools, the so-called compromise, the chiaren attending public schools and the right of the State to educate. Mgr. Satolli referred to the legislation of the Council of Baltimore on the establishment of parochial schools. That legislation favors the establishment of such schools, but its encouragement is not of the unpilable and unreasonable kind that it can accommodate itself to varying circumstances. Parishes must clearly be able but its encourarement is not of the unpilable and unreasonable kind that it can accommodate itself to varying circumstances. Parishes must clearly be able to build and sustain these schools before any such burden can be imposed upon them. These schools must be equal to the competing public schools before pastors can compel children to attend them. The most flagrant abuse in connection with the question of parochial schools is the denial of the sacrament to the parents of children who went to the public schools. This practice is not very widespread, but it obtains in some dioceses presided over by German bishops, particularly in the West, It must stop. The compromise or Faribault or Poughkeepsle plan was easily disposed of by the delegate. It was none of the proper business of the meeting and every effort to introduce it was ruled out by the chairman, Cardinal Gibbons. As long as the propaganda had pronounced upon it, a lower court would not be justified in reopening the case. The victory was clearly on the side of the Farrbault plan, which was "fully allowed" by Rome. The papal delegates' reterence to it was for the purpose of carrying out the will of his chief, namely, that Pope Leo had allowed it and that peace must being.

Secret Societies Not All Condemned. The writer in the Independent says that the question of condemning secret societies was discussed at length by the archibishops, Among the hierarchy in this country this question has long been a source of discussion. In one State a society is condemned. while in other States no such condemnation exists. Efforts have been made to bring about uniformity of discipline in regard to secret societies. Several of the archbishops have been paving the way for stringent measures against the societies. Archbishop Katzer, of Milwaukee, and Archbishop Janssens, of New Orleans, have frequently appeared in print as strong opponents of all secret societies. There is only one society condemned in this country—the Free Masons. The Council of Baltimore put under the ban other societies of a kindred nature, but the Independent writer says when theologians come to look for such societies they can find none.

At previous meetings the archbishops held that it should remain with the con-science of the individual, enlightened by his confessor, whether or not he should leave those other societies regarded as under the ban, but not condemned by name, as are the Free Masons. The writer con-

A Tendency Toward Liberty. Archbishop Katzer led the same opposition at the New York meeting to secret so cieties. He was instructed to do this by the German Catholics assembled at Dubuque, In., some weeks ago. To the Milwaukee prelate it was a labor of love, for some 18 months ago he gave strict orders to his own priests to oppose secret societies in every way, and when it was pointed to him that his action was not in conformity with sound theology, he admitted his mistake and his conferees advised him to write to his priests acknowledging his error. But no headway was made against secret societies at the New York assemblage. Societies such as Sons of Temperance, Odd Feliows, etc., are not looked upon as dangerous by intelligent Catholies. Respectable men belong to them. They seldom talk about religion, and when they do Catholies should not be such cowards as not to delend their own side of the house. On the whole, the tendency is to diminish fulminations against secret societies. German Catholics assembled at Dubuque
