Fair Fads of Fashion.

DIAMONDS are decidedly in bad form in mourning. BLACK, unadorned gloves are in better taste than the dressed or kid ones...

Ultra-fashionables wear black silk lingerie and one stylish widow goes so far as to sleep in black silk sheets.

Corseted crepe is a specialty for mourning. The most stylish wear for a young lady in mourning is a triple cape of crepe.

There is a rumor that the muff is to be suspended round the neck with a gold chain. The chains which will be most sought are those to which our grandmothers used to attach their waltzes.

This fashionable colors for evening gowns are peach, straw, pink, turquoise-blue and Nile-green; for mourning, brown and petunia with various shades of green...

LOVE LETTERS PURLOINED

To Be Used as Evidence by an Injured Husband in a Damage Case.

CHICAGO, Dec. 15.—An envelope containing the ardent love missives alleged to have been written by Edward Plow, the confectioner, to the wife of his friend, Mr. Christian, which the latter expected to use effectively in his suit for $50,000 damages against the manufacturer of sweetmeats...

It is supposed he intended to leave the attorney's office at noon, expecting that the latter would go out for luncheon. Mr. Willet, however, remained at his desk until 2 o'clock...

FOR NERVOUS PROSTRATION Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate. Dr. W. G. Grieve, Northfield, Minn., says: "I have used it in cases of nervous prostration, and also in consultation with other remedies in indigestion; it has proved as satisfactory as could be expected."

who, childless as they were, quite looked upon her as their daughter. "Why, by Jove! I do verily believe you've got over that old curmudgeon, you artful little mix, you!" exclaimed her uncle, in great glee, hurrying her into the house as quickly as possible, all agog to hear her news. "Through some back passages they went, and then opening a green baize door found themselves in the entrance hall. "Come now," said the 'Squire, as they entered the dining room, where Mrs. Mainwaring was waiting for them; "I won't wait a moment longer, so tell your aunt and me all about the result of your ride this instant, miss, or I'll retract my promise of the diamond bracelet I made this morning."

answered he, his grim features relaxing a little, I fancied, as he looked me over. "You don't recollect me, I see," said I, "but Mr. Wilder." Old friends, why, who be 'ee, then, in the name of 'forty?" he replied, looking at me so hard, oh! so hard, uncle. "Have you quite forgotten Little Gladys Onslow, whom you used to be so kind to when you lived at Haledalean farm down in Warwickshire?" "Forgotten? No!" he almost roared, and never shall, that's more! And you're her? Gloom off your horse this instant, my pretty, and into the house and have a talk 'til me over old times." Oh, uncle, the poor old man, do you know, was so pleased. "When I got off my horse, and he held out his hand and I not only took it, but gave him a kiss into the bargain, he actually shed tears, he did, indeed. Well, I went in and had such a talk of old times as never was. And when we had finished I told him what I had come said, "And so you want the stuff—the darned stuff, he called it, uncle—down, do ee, my dear?" I replied that it certainly would please me very much, and you said everybody else as well. "Don't you say another word," he exclaimed, "every bit of it shall be off my farm before nightfall. I only wish you had got something harder to ask me."

THE VOICE OF THE CHARMER. A STORY OF BARBED WIRE. PART I. "Upon my word it's too bad!" exclaimed Mr. Mainwaring, as having wished everybody good morning he sat down to the breakfast table and proceeded, before commencing that meal, to glance through his letters according to custom. "It really is too bad!" he repeated, crimsoning with indignation, and giving an angry stamp of his foot, in his sole petting, and causing that much-panpered animal to give utterance to a loud yell and retreat farther under the table to the shelter of his mistress' petticoats. "My dear," said Mrs. Mainwaring, pausing in the act of pouring out the coffee, "what is the matter now? Nothing wrong with Suburban's little foal, I do trust." "No, thanks, my dear, not so bad as that," answered her husband; "but quite bad enough, in all conscience. It's that dreadful fellow Wilder at the Lea Farm again. I wish to goodness he had never come near the place, with all my heart. "Horrid man!" agreed Mrs. Mainwaring. "I can't bear the sight of him. What has he done now, dear?" "Doubt" exclaimed her husband. "Why stuck up barbed wire all over his farm to be sure, and refuses to remove it on any pretense whatever, so Higgins writes me word."

Eighty-Eight Pianos Already Selected for Christmas Presents. Look at the Record. What Do You Think of It? Most of these are Everetts; some Webster, some Newby & Evans, and some Harvard Pianos, and yet there are some people foolish enough to buy other pianos and pay extravagant prices for them because they bear an old name. Not so with our pianos, who think for themselves and judge of the piano by its merits, which speaks out in the rich beautiful tone, the light responsive action and artistically designed and perfectly finished cases, the seven years' guarantee, the testimony of over 17,000 people who have them in their homes. Our business is complete, while others complain of dull times. The reason is apparent. The people know where to get the best instruments, our stock is complete. You can choose from the best in the market and we will deliver the piano when you want it. Come early and avoid the rush of the few days before Christmas. If you do not want a piano you may want a violin, guitar, mandolin, music box, or some small instrument. We have them all and can please you and save money for you. Alex. Ross' Music House, 143 Federal street, Allegheny, Pa.
