

Miscellaneous.

A Silver Mine.

In days gone by, there lived in the far famed "Queen" city (Cincinnati) a silversmith who had accumulated a fortune through means known only to himself. He was a regular Shylock, and we well remember, when quite a boy, to have incurred his displeasure by accidentally bringing a ball in contact with his bow window, and breaking a pane of glass, for which juvenile mischance we took from him a fine trouncing, and had to shell out, by virtue of a writ of seclatorum, a real Mexican. [An article which in those days would keep a man from starving at least a month.] But to my yarn. This silver-grinder waxed old and rich, yet not a child had he to leave his speller to when he should "shuffle off this mortal coil," and prepare to settle a standing account he had with the other world which we have nothing to do with at present.

One day, while the old codger was reclining in his maple bottomed chair, looking over his pipes, and dreaming, doubtless, of some chemical process by which he could, like alchemists of old, convert everything he touched into gold, a tap on his door aroused him from his lethargy, and expecting a fat customer he quickly rose. In stalked a six foot Buckeye, with a broad-brimmed wool hat, and a back-woods manner which seemed to indicate that he knew no more of the niceties around him than a Malay Indian. After surveying the prospect a moment, he said:

"Stranger! are you the feller/what knows what's silver?"

"Certainly, sir, if twenty-five year's working can give me any knowledge of it."

"Wal, so I thought, for so everybody tell'd me, and that's the cause I've come 45 miles, through mud and rain, to see you,"—at the same time taking off his beaver, and bending his mastadon body into the chair in a stantidicular sort of manner. The Buckeye continued, calmly:

"You knows that I buy'd fifty acres of land in Butler county, and live on Snake Creek, just alongside the Fork. Wal, some of the ground was good, and some wasn't, and so poor that it wouldn't raise yeller taters; wal, one day me and one of our people went a fishing in Snake Creek, and before we went, we goes to dig some worms for bait, when Bill Black says let's turn this log over, and I found this 'ere piece, which the minister says looks like silver."

"The eyes of the old man brightened extending his hand he took the uncouth lump, wiped his specs, and with a trembling hand quickly rose, without noticing his guest, walked into another room, and returned in five minutes."

"You say you found this on your ground."

"Yes, and I have dug up such lumps afore."

"Is there plenty of it?"

"Yes, lots of it."

"The old man stood in silence some time, and at last said:

"My dear friend, this resembles silver, and if you will show me the place you got it from I will decide upon it."

"Wal, if you'll get into that wagon out there I'll drive you there in a little while."

"Thank you, I'll start immediately, for I want to know for your satisfaction of the quality and the extent of this ore."

In they went—off they drove—and early the next morning came to Snake Creek. The silver-smith was shown the identical spot where the lump was found, when, after carefully examining the ground, he said:

"You say that you've dug up more of this stuff here?"

"Sartin; just wait till I get a pick-axe and I'll show you."

Bringing his pick, the fellow begun digging, apparently without casting his eye on any particular spot, when to! another lump of larger size came up; the old man trembled at this evidence of a mine of pure silver!

"That's not half, it's all about here," said his companion, mopping off in another direction, and digging again. The silversmith followed with a quick step, and the woodman, after swinging his pick a short time, brought forth another lump! and still another! Taking the old man around the field, he dug up the same stuff in every direction! This was enough to satisfy Old Nick himself and the old man at last said:

"Young man, this stuff might be made of some value to one who understands smelting it, but as it is of no value to you I would advise you to sell it."

"Yes, but it's so poor ground that nobody'll buy it."

"What did you pay for it?" said the old man.

"Fifty dollars."

"I'll give you a hundred."

"Wal, now, that's fair. I think I'll jest go and ask the old woman."

He went into his cabin, and returned in a minute, saying:

"Stranger, guess I won't sell out now for there's no more ground about here for sale, and the old woman says she won't move away from her people."

The silversmith was fired with the prospect he had of grasping the rich treasure, and went on, offering the fellow a higher and higher price, until he reached a thousand. Buckeye went to the cabin again, but shortly returned: "Can't stand it, stranger. The old woman won't say yes, and there's no use in trying to make her."

This but made the avaricious silver-smith more furious, and after expostulating for some time with the countryman, he said:

"Go and tell your wife that I will give her $2000 for this tract."

He went again, and soon returned with a smile on his phiz that plainly told of his success.

"Wal, stranger, I'll tell you what—the old woman says if you'll plank us $3000 wheelers down, and let us live there till we can move, she'll go it."

"Agreed!" said the voracious silver-smith—a contract was at once made—a bill of sale drawn up by the 'Squire—and a check on Nick Biddle given for the amount, which the countryman soon sold for the ready.

They parted—the silversmith to the city, and the settler in his cabin.

Two days after, the silversmith returned with a host of miners, and commenced operations on a grand scale, but after digging some hours without finding any lumps, a feeling of apprehension began to take hold of them—the silversmith grew pale, and trembling with fear and suspense, he walked straight to the woodman's cabin, and inquiring for the country, found him seated quite contentedly by a large fire, smoking his pipe.

"Good morning, sir—I have come, sir—have had my men at work five hours, sir—and have found none of that ore you showed me?"

"Wal, now, do tell us!" said the fellow coolly, "for there must be TWO MORE LUMPS about. I know I planted seven in all, and we only dug up five!"

The remainder may be easier conceived than described.

Never ask the age of an unmarried lady when she passes five and twenty.

Never show your protested bill to a man you want to borrow money from.

Never expose your poverty to a rich relative if you would have him treat you as a cousin.

Never absent yourself from church, if you have any thoughts of marrying a widow of religious turn of mind.

Never omit to boast of being a good shot—a candle snuffer at ten paces—when in the society of bucks of blood, if you have any antipathy to fighting a duel.

Never let it come to the ears of a rich and childless relative that you secretly pray for his sudden, premature dissolution.

Never tell a man he's a cursed fool; in the first place he won't believe you; and in the next place, you make him your enemy.

Never speak of a gallows to a man whose father or grandfather has been hanged, nor of the corruption of office-holders to a Government defaulter.

Never speak of the "time that tried men's souls" to one of "Tory ancestry, nor of the battle of New Orleans to one who thinks the army of England invincible.

Never attempt to quiz a man in company who might retort by kicking you down stairs.

Never let your friend know, when you drop in to take a friendly dinner with him, that your landlady "blocked the game" on you, because you had not paid her your last week's board.

Never wear a bad coat while you can "run your face" with your tailor.

Never request your wife (if you have one) to be silent, because it's asking an impossibility.

Never impose secrecy on a man to whom you communicate any thing in confidence; he is sure to tell it to some friend if you do.

Never take a newspaper without paying for it; it is the shabbiest act you could possibly be guilty of.

A GOOD JOKE.—The following laughable hit was got off by the editor of the Liberty Standard. A joke's a joke and so we give it a place:

"The Whigs are loud for the protection of wool on a sheep's back, but care nothing for it when on a man's head."

OLE BULL.—"I'd give anything to hear Ole Bull," said an up-country lass to her lover, an evening or two since.

"Well," answered he, "dad's got an old brindle chap, and you can hear him beller almost any time you like."

DURABILITY OF CEDAR.—A cedar shingle put on the barn of Ensign Abel Bliss, Wilbraham, in May, 1840, and taken off by his grandson John Bliss, July 9th 1844; and making it 104 years old, and yet but little rotten.

"I bow at beauty's shrine," as the girl said when she courted to the looking glass.

Many people are praised for a giddy kind of good humor, which is as much a virtue as drunkenness.

"Millions for de defence!" as the nigger said when the bull chased him across a ten acre lot.

Dr. Franklin said LEISURE is the time for doing something useful; this leisure the diligent man will obtain, but the lazy man never; so that as Poor Richard says, A life of leisure and a life of laziness are two things.
