Brady, the American Borderer.

In an account given by a tourist of his journey, to the falls of Cupahoga, nears ly gave an exhibition of courage and Lake Erie, and published in Silliman's Journal of Science, we find the following particulars of Samuel Brady, a noted America Borderrr, who flourished about sixty years ago;

" Brady was over six feet high, with light blue eyes, fair skin, and dark hair; he was remarkably straight, an athall the toils and hardships of a frontier glory." But to the deed of his intrepid life, and had become very obnoxious to daring, the thought of which sets our the Indians, from his numerous successful attacks on their war parties, and cursions whenever they crossed his path, obnoxious to him, or cross his path, and or came within reach of his rifle ; he was thus cross him. A neighboring lady personally engaged in more hazardous called to see his wife, on business of a contests with the savages than any other man west of the mountains, except Daniel Boone. He was, in fact, an "Indian hater," as many of the early borderers, more numerous in this region than any other portion of the frontiers: and this murders and attacks on defenceless families that for many years followed that disaster. Brady, was also a very successful trapper and hunter, and took more beavers than themselves. In one have been but a small gratification to I WILL PEEK!!!" that of satiating their revenge by burning him at a slow fire, in presence of all the Indians of their village. He was therefore taken alive to their encampmouth. Quick as thought and with intuitive prescience, he snatched it from her and threw it into the midst of the flames. Horror-struck at the sudden outrage, the Indians simultaneously rushed to rescue the infant from the fire. In the midst of this confusion Brady darted from the circle, overturning all that came in his way, and rushed into the adjacent thickets, with the Indians yelling at his heels. He ascended the steep side of a hill amidst a shower of bullets, and darted down the opposite declivity, secreted himself in the deep ravines and laurel thickets that abounded severalimiles out of bed-fly round-stir about, and in to the west of it. His knowledge of the country and wonderful activity enabled him to elude his enemies, and reach the settlement on the south side of the Ohio river, which he crossed by swimming. The hill near whose base this adventure is said to have happened still goes by this name, and the incident referred to by the traveller as the coach is slowly dragged up its side."

Domestic Felicity cannot be equalled in the whole round of enjoyments of which men are perpetually in the pursuit. It is the greatest, because the most rational; the sweetest, because those whom we love are partakers of it: whether it be communicated to us in the conversation of the hoary and of the parents, or the reciprocal exchange of fraternal sentiments of heartfelt affection.

A Courageous Man.

There are some truly courageous men n our land at the present day, who like the dauntless Ethan Allen, fear neither man nor beast. There is a fellow of this stamp up the river a few miles, who latebold daring unparalled in the history of American Revolution-yea, even outstripping Putnam in the wolf's den and Crockett among the bears, the alligators and the wildcats.
