Culture of Corn.

As the time is approaching to plant corn, it may not be opportune to throw out a few brief hints, not as to the best mode_for every grower of this multrititious grain is, already, in possession of the best mode of culture-but as mere suggestions as to what we consider a good plan to produce a renumerating crop. To begin them at the beginning he who expects to make his acres tell a tale of production that he may not be ashamed of, must lay himself out, in the first place, to put his ground in good condition, and this can only be effected by deep ploughing, and such pulverisation, by harrowing and cross-harrowing, as will make the tilth as fine as Ole Bull's fiddle. To expect the corn to plant and manure its fruit luxuriantly in a cloddy and half prepared soil, is just as unreasonable as would be the attempt to get up steam without fire. In the second place, unless his land be in a very high state of fertility, he must make arrangements to manure his corn ground with a Mr. Caudle; I know there's a good liberal—nay, with a prodigal hand—for, of a truth, the corn plant is a most vora- a little bit of it. I'm sure I'd tell vou cious feeder, and delights like many a gourmand, to luxuriate amid grass viands of many compounds. In the third place, he should be assiduous in working his crop from its first coming up, until he going to sleep; because you're not .lays it by, in order that in the race for the Do you suppose I'd ever suffered you mastery, the weeds may always be kept to go and be made a mason, if I didn't down, and never for a day permitted to suppose I was to know the secret, too? rob the corn plants of any portion of the Not that it's anything to know, I dare parties husband and wife, till death shall food which may be buried in earth, or say; that's why I'm determined to them part. In a word, the earth know it. should at all times be kept clean from weeds, and open to the influences of sun, air, dew and rain, properties as essential to ill use poor women; to tyranize over to their growth as the best and most enriching manures.

We have recommended deep ploughwould we be from recommending deep considerable height. Indeed, after the first working, we abandon the plough altogether, and rely upon the cultivator, to be followed by careful hoemen to eradiby the former implement; for notwithstanding many intelligent writers, as well as practical planters contend that the cutting off the roots by the plough is bet) our notions and common sense view sides. of things. Nature intended the roots as tend to retard their growth, because such tion and elaboration of that portion of

With regard to very large crops of corn, we have a remark or two to make. all such trumpery, I know. It must be obvious, that without close planting, no matter what the quality of the soil may be no matter how notably the culture may be pursued-unless a sufficient number of stalks be grown upon an acre, the yield will always be more or less circumscribed, as without the stalks be on the earth they cannot produce ears of corn.

It should be an object with every corn grower to provide his corn ground with lime, plaster, and ashes, as well as the nutritive manures, for unless there be potash in the soil to dissolve the sand, and form what is called the silicate of potash, the substance which composes the outer-crust of the cornstalk-vegetation cannot go on with that economy which leads to the fructification of the grain, as the stalks are mainly composed of sand, reduced by the action of potash into a fluid state, and thus taken up by the roots and distributed, so as to impart to it the capacity to stand erect and sustain its burden.

Ten bushels of ashes and one of plaster, well mixed together, is sufficient for an acre, whether sown broadcast, or used in, or on the top of each hill. We have sometimes thought that the best disposition to be made of plaster and ashes. would be to compost them with the manure of the barn yard before hauling it out to be ploughed; -by such treatment nity of the hills.

The soaking of the seed of corn in a weak solution of saltpetre or of copperas, before being planted, has a two-fold etfect-it promotes early germination and prevents the depredations of worms and birds. We have used bath soaks, and never without being impressed with the conviction of having derived advantage from each.

We have, with decided good effect, sown two bushels of salt, broadcast, on an acre of corn after it had come up.-The effect as it manifested itself to us, was, to maintain, in one of the driest seasons we have ever experienced, a degree of moisture on the part where the salt was used, highly beneficial—to have preserved the blades green when those around the salted part crumbled into powder on the slightest touch of the

Married in Pan.

The following incident is said to have taken place recently in the neighborhood of Rochester, N.Y.:

A sleigh-riding party went out to Rush, in "the Great Western," and after dancing and frolicing to their heart's content, they set their faces homeward, at two o'clock in the morning. At four o'clock, the storm being at its highest, the party had to stop for day light, at a small town near the city, where, huddled together in a room too small for a dance, the leaders set their heads to devising a new method of killing time. A wealthy old bachelor and a pretty girl of eighteen were hauled up to be married, and a young attorney in the company was selected to play the parson, or the magistrate.

The young knot-tyer, thus unceremoniously pressed into service, and duly | Borax sensible of the part he was playing, delivered himself of a most eloquent address to the parties, in reference to the solemn step they were about to take; but the impromtu eloquence of the officiator only brought down peals of laughter at his mock-seriousness, and made the party more urgent to have him proceed; and the bachelor being too much of a gentleman to back out, Cinnamon and the girl pleased with the sport, Cloves pronounced the words in imitation of her partner, and in the presence of the Copperas selected witness, which, according to the laws of New York, constituted the clared the parties man and wife, and given each of them a certificate, and filed a copy with the town clerk, informed the company that he had done all the law required-and the driver declaring that all was ready, the party left the tavern in high glee, and made their way into town. The next day, the legal adviser of the bridegroom informed him that he was legally married, and that the laws of this State made no provisions for joking. So much for being married in fun.
