The republication of this valuable work has been undertaken partly on account of the high favor with which it has been received in England, but chiefly in which is near received in value, arising from the felicitons adaption of the plan to a want that has been dilicitous adaption of the plan to a want that has been song and generally felt, and from the judgment, and deleity menifested in its execution. The idea of giving in a single work, of no very formidable dimensions, a afficient outline of the world's whole history, and similar outlines of the history of every metion, is so obvious, judicious and sppropriate as to require no cologium. Every person who cares at all for the acquisition of useful knowledge must desire to posses such a general knowledge of past events, not only in his own country but in all countries, as shall enable him to understand the perpetually recurring allusions that are found in almost any course of general reading; because for want of such understanding there is always a serious diminution both of pleasure and profit even in the for want of such understanding there is always section diminution both of pleasure and profit even in the perusal of such works as are designed chiefly for any usement. For instance, most of Sir Walter Scott's novels are founded upon history, and abound with reference to historial events and personages, a want of some acquaintance with which detracts ecrously from the interest and delight they are so well qualified to awaken; and so of delight they are so well qualified to awaken; and so of most other works belonging to the better class of what is called light literature. But the difficulty has been to obtain this general knowledge without going through many books, requiring a greater expenditure of time and money than most persons are able or willing to afford; For Blackwood's Magazine, and to obviste such difficulty has been the purpos of Mr.

His plan has the merit of completeness, and is un doubtedly the best that could have been desired. H doubtedly the best that could have been desired. It, gives first a general sketch of ancient and modern history—a rapid and comprehensive, bird's-eye view, as it were of the rise and progress of nations, the most important incidents of their exceet, and their relations to each other; and after this be takes up the nations separately, fornishing a concise digest of all that is, important or desirable to know concerning each, and thus separately, formining a concise ungest of an time is, incoming the money may be enclosed in a letter, Post paid, the money may be enclosed in the money may be duced by the late Post-Office law, a short one-distance agreable compass; and an excellent foundation is laid for more thorough and extensive reading, in reference to any portion of the world or any epech of which a complete knowledge may be desired.

In the execution of this plan the author has been very successful. His notices of historical events though being a green and an extensive reading in reference to any portion of the world or any epech of which a complete knowledge may be desired.
