Apples for Farm Stock.

The laws of strict economy require that every edible and mitritive substance produced on the lands of the farmer, be rigidly economized, and appropriated to some profitable use. For several years back. we have been in the habit of feeding apples to garious kind of farm stock hogs, cows, horses and steep-and the result of our experience is a firm conviction that few of our farm products are more generally, than apples, whether sweet of sour? It was not, however, without some misgivings that we commenced feeding them to our cows, as we had previously imbibed a very strong prejudice; against feeding these useful animals on anything except hay and grain; but this fallacy was soon cradicated by experience, although we were repeatedly assured by several of our wise neighbors, that such food inevitably cause them to "shrink their milk." if indeed it did not engender sickness and perhaps diseases we might find it difficult to cure.-We have no doubt that under certain circumstances. this may be in part true: for one of our cows breaking into a neighbor's orchard, and partaking freely of the immature droppings, or "wind falls," she became ill, with slight feyer, and for one or two milkings there was an obvious, though slight diminution of nilk, (probably), as the results. And the same, admitting the green fruit to have been the cause, would have resulted, had she broken into our friend's clover, and gorged herself on his aftermath, as repletion, when the food taken is of a succulent and fermentable quality, inevitable tends to relient and Tobacco.

produce fever. The economy of digestion, is impeded, or, for a time arrested, and lactescent organs. like all the other parts of the system, are sympathetically affected, and diseased. In order that we like the current sent by addressing as above. might have the advantage of reliable data from which to deduce our inferences, we selected a conple of cows, and fed them exclusively on apples. with the exception of a very slight foldering of hay the view of the transfer or meal morning and night, for two months; and we never made more or better butter from the same. quantity of milk, during the same period, than from t the milk drawn from the two cows thus fed. or as some would say starved."

- Reasoning from analogy, the corollary seems un. avoidable, that ripe, well matured apples are better for food than those that are crude, or but partially ripe. In both the quantity of juice is not, perhaps, materially different, but the juice of the ripe is more perfectly elaborated, and less likely to induce diseases and obstructions in the udder, as is sometimes the case, we are confident, when animals are fed lavishly on apples in their crude or unripe state As to the quantity necessary for a medium sized cow, we have found from a peck to a half bushelvarying the quantity of course, with the variations of the animal's appetite for them-to answer all the purposes of the most liberal feeding with hay and grain. We are glad to perceive that the practice of feeding domestic antmals on this kind of fruitinstead of making it into eider, which at best, is a great waste of a valuable article that ought to be approprated to a better and more profitable use-has already become quite common, especially in sections where it is raised in large quantities, and where. from the benign radience selence is shedding upon the paths of the toiling husbandinam, improvement is no longer regarded as sacrifege, or crime. could exist on such food, and the writer-who should be the could exist on such food, and the writer-who should be the foods of the could be t have reccommended apples as alfood for any kind of stock, would have been regarded as a dunce, or W perhaps, a fool. We hope that those of our readers who have large orchards and who can easily satisfy their doubts on this subject, if they any longer invalue of apples for themselves. We have many more facts to communicate, all going decidedly Manuscovers and and most incontrovertibly to prove the position we spun out to a much more tedious extent than we intended, we shall reserve them till a tuture number; hoping in the mean time, that a subject of so much importance to the the farming community will be considered with candor and favored with the attention it so eminently deserves, by all.

New Insects.-The damaged Indian corn which has been introduced into Ireland to meet the wants of the people, is likely to cause far more serious and lasting njury to the country than the mere bringing into consumption an article of food deleterious to the public health. In many instance the indian com which was heated, teems with swarms. of little reptiles or insects of different varieties some shaped like ants, others like diminutive beetles, which make their way into all the houses in the neighborhood of corn stores, and have proved an excessive annoyance from their numbers as well as with the venom with which they bite, and mischief they inflict by eating plants and leaves in the garden However interesting it may be to entomologists to examine the structure, and classify and arrange the new and varied forms of those strange insects, it is an alarming fact that, in addition to our local and indigenous vermin, we should have had introduced amongst us other of a stinging destructive character, which are likely to propagate their species, and to teed upon leaves and seeds of plants and vegetables, so as seriously to retard and injure vegetation .-Cork Examiner

The application of the oil produces no pain, but on the contrary an agree able and pleasant sensation. The recipe for this medicine has been optained from an Aurist of great reputa tion, who has found that deafness, in ninoteen cases out of twenty, was produced from a want of action in the nervos of hearing, or a dryness in the cars; his object therefore was to find something which would create a healthy condition in those parts. After a long series of experiments his efforts were at last crowned with success, in the discovery of this preparation, which has received the name of SCARPA'S COMPOUND ACOUS TIC Oll.
