vain hope that we shall be able to say any thing new and original, but with the more rational one, that we may be able to remind some of them of a few things that might otherwise have escaped their recollections. If we shall succeed in this latter purpase, the height of our ambittion will have been gratified, and our object attained.

Before we come to notice the labors of the farm we would, however, be permitted to make a lew passing remarks on the prospect of a foreign market for the surplus products of the grain grower.-And in the first place, we would observe, that the intelligence subsequently received has but tended to confirm the opinions we had previously formed and expressed in our December number. All the reasons which operated, serve but to strengthen our belief in the soundness of the opinions we then formed and gave voice to. Indeed every sentence of the Queen of England's speech to parliament, all the opinions of the British press, connected with the monetary affairs of the United Kingdom, go to show that the moneyed revulsion of experience, arose from the necessity which pervailed there during the last year, of eking out so heavy a portion of their purchases of breadstuffs and provisions with bullion-that it was the necessity of sending their precious metals to us, to procure the necessaries of life that brought about that stringency in money matters that has led to all her commercial embarrasment, and brought ruin upon so many commercial houses of theretofore good standing. Had England been able to pay for the thirty-three millions of ertra food imported by her, with the products of her manufactories, the operation would have been one of immense profit to her, because it would have been the reward of the current industry of her people; but when she had to draw so largely upon her past earnings to sustain their wants, its effects were immediately felt, and as a consequence, natural and inevitable, enterprise became enveloped in difficulty, and speculation paralyzed, for the simple reason that banks could no longer grant accommodations, because the incessant drafts which had been made upon their bullion, the which forming the basis of their paper issues, could exert a potential influence to do good no longer than it remained in their vaults where alone it possessed the power of representative creation. Some have been short-sighted enough to ascribe to the railroad enterprises of England, her monetary difficulties of the last year, but such an ascription is as absurd as fallacious, as every dollar thus occupied, tended to stimulate and bring into active life her industry, create labor, and give employment. And thowever unproductive any of these enterprises may have proved to the individual stockholdere, as the money did not go out of the country, but on the contrary, was kept in the country, it could exert none other than a beneficial influence, because, i-s ead of the vast amounts thus invested being confined to a few hands, being locked up in the coffer of capitalists-it became diffused was circulated through every vein and artery, and thus became the common source of employment and reward to the industrial classes.

Through the failures in England have become less trequent, the pressure for money comparatively abated, the effects of the demands made last year inpon her past earnings, will continue to be felt for a year or so, and until the sum thus expended shall be replaced by future earnings; and hence quantity for a young pig. Breeding in and in must it is, that her inability to be an extensive purchase of foreign products will also continue so long as the cause which produced it may last. Fruitful as England is, large as are the products of her fields, she must, however, from the density of her population, ever continue a customer for a considerable portion of her breadstuffs, and so long as her duties shall remain as now, we may, to a certain extent, divide the supply with the grain producers of Europe, though from the superior contiguity of those bordening on the Black sea, and the Baltic, and the cheapness of labor in those countries, they will, except in years like the past, always have the advantage over us and hence it is, that England heretofore has mostly drawn the deficiency of her supplies from those countries and that our exportations of flour there, have been governed by the rates of Exchange. In taking a view of all the operating causes, with the desire to arrive at just conclusions, we have become impressed with the belief, that although our exportations to England, of breadstuffs and provisions during 1848, will fall very far short in amount to those of 1817, still they will be greater than they had been for a long series of years prior to the latter year. The reason of this is obvious—the famine of 1817 cleared out all the accumulations of former years, so that, though the dust in, and some old broken mortar, or lime for crop of grain in England of last year proved a productive one, the actual deficiency will be greater than in former years less productive inasmuch as the demands of consumption will have little or no hens will supply you with a goodly number of tresh warehoused grain to back upon. The same cause which operated to clear out the depositories of England, had a like effect in clearing out the barns in our own country-for much grain which had been held over a year or two, for better prices, found markets during the last year. The reports of all the rail roads and canals, which are the carriers of the products, prove this, by the unmistakable fact, ly as well in winter as in spring, summer and authat their lines of transportations were increased tumn. more than an hundred per cent. It is plain then, from the premises suggested, that the consumption | avoid the evil of breeding in and in, an evil which 1847, almost exclusively for supply, whether that of the constitution. consumption shall have relation to fereign or home demand, and such being the case, the inference is a legitimate one, that prices will so rule, as to yield should be alternated-Corn, oats buckwheat and a fair reward to the producers of breadstuffs and provisions during the present year.

Of the article of Corn and Corn -meal, we would remark, that if pains be taken to send none to the markets of England, Ireland, and Scotland, but wnat shall have been kiln-dried, during the present year, that its superior excellence as a cheap food for man, and a fattener for stock, will so command it to layor, that it will establish permanent markets in those countries, and continue to find outlets there for a very considerable portion of our surplus.

Turning from prospective demands, and prices, let us see what may be done during this month

ON THE FARM.

Working Horses and Mules .- As these noble creatures are now severely taxed with the ordinary-labors of the farm-and as they will be continued to be so taxed they should receive all possible aftention, kindness and care, They should be fed and watered at regular hours; three times a day, be be carried or carded, and brushed or wisped down night and morning. And as it is destrable that , they should enter upon their spring labors in fine is of practice.

condition, if they are not in good plight now, they should have moderate increase of grain food, their larly eleaned every morning. . If their hair should appear dead, and their hides bound, they should have a quart of buckwheat meal, or a pint of lin eed meal mixed in their feed thrice a week for week or so, and should receive two of three morn ings in succession, a handful of sahes and 3 or ounces of salt, each—this latter may be either mixed up with their feed or placed in their troughs th be consumed by them between meals. Working Ozen.-Let increased care be meter out to these faithful animals, not forgetting, that i hard labor should be required of them, that com and cob meal is an admirable encourager of strength. fig. and a disposition to do their work kindly. Indeed, we might say, that he who who expects them to do a full day's work must hever fail to give them daily allowances of both long and short feed, as no animal can meet such demands upon his strength unless he be well fed. The ox, though he can exist, and often is compelled to exist out of doors, nevertheless delights in and thrives much better when allowed a good warm bed to rest his weary limbs upon. He should also receive twice a week a handful of salt-or what is better, a handful of a mixture composed of equal parts of salt, lime and Milch and In-Calf Cours .- Each of these should experience increased attention. Their lodgings should be in a dry warm shed, facing the south.-Besides the usual allowance of hay or fodder, they should receive daily, each, a portion of roots or their equivalent in corn and cob meal made into slops in which cut straw should be mixed. If curried or rubbed down daily, their comfort would be greatly increased and their appearance improved, greatly increased and their appearance improved, Kelly Wm F while the same attention should be paid to salting Kiff Erastas 2 them as is to the horses and other beasts of burthen. Once in every two weeks pour in the cup on the top of the head, just behind the horns, a tea spoonful of the spirits of turpentine, and thus prevent them from having the hollow hom. Currying their manes daily and good feed will prevent their becoming lousy. Should they however become so, wash the crown of their heads and tops of their necks with strong brine, then with a wisp of straw rub them dry, when you should oil them from the Brian Wm crown of their head down the back bone to the rump with fish oil. This if repeated three or four days in succession, will kill all the lice. Another Blackman J C safe remedy is a decoction of the garden larkspur. The surest prevention is cleanliness and good feeding. Neither a cow nor an ox will ever get in that condition if well fed and curried daily. Breeding Mares and Colts.—These should be proided with warm sheds, dry bedding and good food, short as well as long, and in every respect, except in quantity, receive similar treatment as the Young Stock of all kinds, must be provided with dry warm sheds and bedding, and have their appetites reasonably grafified. He that expects a young mimal, who may be half-starved, to grow, elaborate flesh, muscle and fat, has faith enough to believe in the discovery of the philosopher's stone.

Swine, Breeding Sows, Pigs and Store-Hogs .-These should be all provided with good pens in which they may sleep warm and dry, and, should be fed and watered regularly; have charcoal or rotten wood at all times in their pens, and given a mixture of equal quantities of sait and ashes once a week, say a handful to each hog, and half that Kellum Ennice t he included in beyond the the second genera-

Sheep.-Presuming that you have provided yourself with proper sheds for these animals, we will admonish you that it is necessary to keep their beds dry-that you should daily give to each sheep three ounds of hay or its equivalent in other food-that they require to be watered every day, and to be allowed salt at all times—that you should twice a week put tar and salt into a trough free to their acess and throw them pine bows to browse upon at least once a week: that where wool is your chief object bean meal is the best short food you can give them, it being the most active agent in the ecretion of wool known to the flock-masters.

Barns, Stables and other out-buildings,-Subject these to a scrutinizing examination, have all necessary repairs promptly made, and then white-wash each thoroughly.

Poultry Houses.-Give to these such a cleaning, nests and all, as will leave nothing filthy behindthen white-wash them inside and outside, taking care to infuse salt into the white-wash.

Poultry.-If you wish your hens to lay, provide under cover, convenient to your hen house, a pile of sand, gravel, and one of ashes, for your fowls to the hens to pick at. Mix with their food fresh med of some kind, chopped fine, until the frost is out of ground, and you may rest assured that your eggs. When a hen cannot, owing to the frost, scratch and procure worms and other insects, you must supply her with a substitute, which can be found alike in fresh meat or fresh fish; when the latter may be used, it should always be boiled and the bones picked out. Give a hen lime, ashes, sand, gravel and fresh meat, and she will lay near-

Turkeys, Ducks and Chickens should at this season of the year be fed three times a day—their food potatoes mashed with corn meal are all good-so also is turnips chopt fine-or cabbage when mixed with meal.

Fencing and Fences.-If you have not already done so, go forthwith to the woods and get out all the stell that you may require for fencing purposes When cut down, haul it home, and employ your hands in wet weather in morticing the posts and sharping and pointing the rails, in order that you may be ready upon the earliest occasion to erect new or repair your old fences. Recollect that while rickety fences encourage stock to commit depredations, that such fences are taken as the sure evidences of a slovenly farmer; the world will be much add cted to draw unfavorable conclusions from outward apearances, and too uncharitable to make any allowances for neglects of duty of the
