

Bradford Reporter
E. O. GOODRICH, EDITOR.

Towanda, Wednesday, June 14, 1848.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.
FOR PRESIDENT,
Gen. LEWIS GASS, of Michigan.
FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,
Gen. W. C. BUTLER, of Kentucky.
FOR CABAL COMMISSIONER,
ISRAEL PAINTER,
OF WESTMORELAND COUNTY.
The Ninth Volume.

With this number of the Reporter we enter upon the Ninth year of its existence. We can do no better in indulging in retrospection and solemn reflections, than quote the words of a departed poetess, once a resident, as she is still the pride of our town, expressing all we would wish to say:—

"Another year! another year!
So whippers in his feet,
Will reckless time, that on the year,
He leaves the shadow of his wing
To hide the creaking of his wheels
A gleam of memory's sunny spring."

We cannot permit the occasion to pass without rendering our acknowledgments to our friends and patrons who have so liberally sustained the Reporter from its commencement, and particularly during the past year. The steady increase of its patronage is a sufficient guarantee that the earnest endeavors to propagate the good will and confidence of the intelligent and reading yeomanry of Bradford County have not been entirely unavailing.

We enter upon a new volume with a determination to increase our claims upon the patronage of the public. In point of appearance, the Reporter will compare favorably with its neighbors, and while we shall maintain with liberality and independence, the Great Truths we profess, we shall endeavor to do so in a spirit of candor and fairness which will command the respect of those who may differ from us.

The circulation of the Reporter, and consequently its sphere of usefulness, may yet be extended by a little exertion on the part of its friends. We ask of such, that they shall aid us, as they deem us worthy, and their kindness will be gratefully acknowledged.

The Prospect in New York.

The New York Daily Globe brings us the proceedings of the great meeting of the Radical Democracy of that city, held in the Park, on Tuesday, the 6th inst. The meeting is represented as a tremendous gathering, and may serve as criterion to judge of the state of political feeling in the Empire State. Addresses were delivered by Hon. C. C. Cambreling, John Van Buren, Hon. Benjamin F. Butler, and Gen. Nye. The speeches of these gentlemen are mainly, eloquent, able and independent; and the resolutions set forth in a clear and satisfactory manner, the wrongs and insults they have suffered; repudiate the nominations, declaring that the great state of New York has no hand in making them, and that under no circumstances will they support them. The New York Evening Post, and the Daily Globe, two able democratic papers of the city of New York, are also denouncing the proceedings as outraging the rights of the Radical Democracy of that State. The former declares that "Gen. Taylor will sweep the South from Cape May to Key West;" and the latter, while it "declares without reserve that Gen. Taylor can never receive the support of the Globe," says also, "that as he now stands before the people of both parties, his election would be preferable to that of Cass. His election would annihilate Honkersonism in this State, and in the Union." Gen. Taylor's friends, it will be seen, refused to commit him further, in the late Whig Convention.

From the spirit and determination displayed by all of the Barnburner papers, we are satisfied that all attempts to reconcile them with the Conservatives of that State, will be in vain. Those who hold out such hopes, deceive themselves, if they are honest. Such calculations are delusive and futile. The man who attempts it, however "high he may stand at present, loses their confidence and respect. We must make up our minds to do without the aid of New York, in electing our candidates. It is, to be sure, taking a strong force from the Democratic party—fix to be sanguine of Victory, we have already counted upon New York—but we do not entirely despair, if the South remain true to the pledges they have given of support to our candidates. Should they betray us, and go en masse for Gen. Taylor, for the reason of his being a Slaveholder, our defeat would be certain and overwhelming. But we can hardly believe they will be treacherous enough for that—although it is so confidently predicted. However, "we shall see—what we shall see," and a few weeks will make all the necessary developments.

ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT.—The following table of the number of Electoral votes to which each state will be entitled at the ensuing election, will be useful for frequent reference during the campaign:—

Maine	9	Alabama	9
New Hampshire	6	Mississippi	6
Vermont	6	Ohio	23
Massachusetts	12	Louisiana	12
Rhode Island	4	Kentucky	12
Connecticut	6	Tennessee	13
New York	36	Indiana	12
New Jersey	7	Illinois	12
Pennsylvania	28	Missouri	9
Delaware	3	Arkansas	5
Maryland	8	Michigan	5
Virginia	17	Florida	5
North Carolina	11	Texas	4
South Carolina	9	Iowa	4
Georgia	10	Total	288

To the above, in all likelihood, will be added Wisconsin, with four votes.

"THE NATIONAL REFORMER."—We have received the first number of a new paper with this title printed in Honesdale, Pa., by Reynolds & Drake. It is devoted, as its title indicates, to the dissemination of the principles of the National Reformers, and the number before us is a well-printed sheet, displaying a good deal of talent.

Hon. JOHN WESTWORTH, the faithful and honest Representative from Chicago Ill. had been nominated by the Democrats of his district.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.

...the world has not been as frequent as would be expected. When they do, they are usually the result of some extraordinary circumstance, and are not the result of any regular and steady process. The people, however, are not generally aware of this, and are prone to believe that the world is in a constant state of flux and change. It is only by a careful study of the past, and a comparison with the present, that we can see the truth of this matter. The world is not what it seems, and is not what it has been. It is a vast and mysterious system, and one that is constantly changing and evolving. We must not be misled by the surface appearances, but must look into the heart of the matter, and see the true nature of things.