THE GRENADE.

Mother! I heard a sound last night—
A sound of melody low and light,
As I lay on my bed where soft-brown pale light
Rests soft in their silver veil;

And waked through the open casement wide,
The shimmering light of each dancing fly,

But round the window its tendrils twine,
And so softly is mole in my lonely room;

Mother, dear mother! where did it come?

Child! it was but the boatman's song;
But he sings in the water all the night long;
Or the wall of the waves from the distant sea;
Or the voice of lute, or the sweet guitar;

Or some lone singer to his mistress fair;

Or the night-bird's note from the mountain crest;

Child, sweet child! lie still and rest!

Mother! I heard that low, sweet tone;
At midnight hour as I lay alone,

And never such melody fell before;

Though music was sweet in the days of yore,

Was softer than in the distance heard;

And sweeter than note of singing bird;

Was not like the moan of the troubled sea;

Not the long song-night of the boatman free;

As it fell on my ear, it seemed to arise,

From the unseen depths of the breathing air;

And speak of me of an off-hand!

Mother, dear mother! whence did it come?

Child, sweet child! be still and rest!

Calm the thoughts of your troubled breast;

The sounds that you heard last night only came,

From your mind, disturbed by the fever's flame;

Or the night-wind's song in the distance near;

Sounded them to your restless ear;

It was but this, and your unquiet breast;

Child, dear child! lie still and rest!

Mother! I hear those sounds again,

And they come not alone from my fevered brain;

They are not like the songs that the night winds sing,

As they fan the leaves with a gentle wing;

Brightened now by the morning dews;

It is the songs of angels singing there;

I see their forms so bright and fair,

They call me hence to that sweet home—

Mother, dear mother! thence they come!

Yes, sweet child! they come from the sky!

I see a bright light in your loving eye;

It is the light of death! and the hectic glow,

You have seen the heavens opening fair—

You have heard the songs of the angels there;

You are going away to your long, long home;

And your restless thoughts no longer go roving;

Tranquill now is your gentle breast;

Farewell, sweet child! 'tis your long sum-

published. How interesting would we look for each paper if we thought that it might contain something from the pen of an omniscient! It would induce a great many to take the paper who do not take it if they could find in it comments from different parts of their own country.

Come, young men; while you are following the plow you must think of something—why not think occasionally of something? I know a young man say the other day, that if he wished to think upon any particular subject he would rather be following a plow after a steady yoke of oxen than in any other situation. Some composed some of his sweetest songs while driving his "bonny team astied." And you must consider that a man's head is in one particular similar to the widow's basket of meat and crust of oil—that is, the more he takes out of it the more there is in. And girls—young ladies I should have said; but I don't like to erased—I must ask of you this boon. When you stroll through your flower-garden, he scented meadow of the fragrant glories in the morning, to feast your eyes with the beautiful or to listen to the harmonious music of nature; or when you wander forth with a forced one at twilight to enjoy the quiet wicket of the evening hour—it at such times sunny thoughts or beautiful fancies fill through your minds, to let them fly away to catch and tame them with your pen, and they may touch a sympathizing chord in the bosom of some other, or which will vibrate tenderly. Remember that

"The bird that flies highest
Was born in the lowest
And narrowest nest."

There! I have said my say for this time. Quite lofy for a plow-boy isn't it; to be giving advice to the boys and "girls," but good-bye.

Another Prospect.

The following curious statement is made in a recent letter of the regular Paris correspondent of the London Atlas:

"Wonders will never cease in Paris. A discovery which has lately been made of an extraordinary individual living at the Barrière d'Enfer, and who proclaims himself to the world as the heir and successor of Jesus Christ, has created the greatest curiosity among the miracle-hunters of our capital. This man is a peasant of the name of Parissard, about five and forty years of age, simple and unprepossessing manners, and homely speech. He is however, manifestly under some extraordinary magnetic influence; for he has caused, by the effect of his touch alone, many hundred of persons who have been to visit him. He receives all strangers who seek him, with the greatest simplicity, disclaims any credit for the wonderful cures he performed, merely repeating the assurance of his uprightness by our Saviour, who appeared to him in a dream, to go forth to the world to testify to the truth of the Gospel. He is of short stature and of full expressive countenance. His hair, parted at the forehead, depends on either side of his temples. The world would be nothing remarkable about the man were it not for the circumstance which has given birth to the willies, or the unhappy delusion, whichever it may be, that he thus openly avances, were it not for the extraordinary stories on his hands and feet, and the deep cicatrices in his wrists, which fasten the hand to which his name is confined. The police have had more active in causing the strictest investigation to be made into the history and abominations of the man; but as yet nothing has been discovered which can in any way serve as excuse for molesting him. All that is known is to the fact that he has recently arrived from Grasse, where he had lived a holy and religious life, much beloved by the old peasant women, who had nursed him, and who even on the hour of his death, declared to have loved him ever since morning till noon, in beneath hedge near Grasse town. No trace of his parents has ever been discovered. He never was married, and died without any friends or acquaintances at his house; therefore the authorities of Paris have sought to do in this case. Several physicians of eminence have already been to visit him, but none have as yet been able to solve the mystery of the long tail and bleeding."

Dr. C. —He is the great anatomist after remaining two hours in his room, but Friday, left in despair, declaring, with an oath, that the juggle was too well managed for discovery; and, therefore, the mystery, like that of the celestial virgin of the Tyrol, remains a mystery still."

A TANZAN.—On the last trip of a little coasting steamer from the mouth of Cabotia to this port, the clerk actuated by a spirit of devilry, sealed a general falsehood in the name of the master.

"Halo," cried the clerk, "what port are you bound for?" "I am bound for Boston," replied the master, "but I am bound for Boston."

"What are you loaded with?" continued the clerk.

"Hooper empty barrels, salves, and oils,"

"What are you bound for?" asked the master.

"Boston," replied the master, "but I am bound for Boston."
