PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT TOWANDA, BRADFORD COUNTY, PA., BY E. O'MEARA GOODRICH

TOWANDA:

Sainrday Morning, Jannary 3, 1852.

TALE OF THE IRISH REBELLION.

ET WILLIAM H. MAXWELL

What says the married woman? You may go;
Hold she had never given you leave to come.
ANTONICAND CLEOPATRA [CONCLUDED] .

Daring as Porcell's spirit was, his heart throbbed bursting, and he gave himself up as a se were a part. Irritated by his escape, blows they had received would be fearfully reany effort at a fresh escape! Alas! no hands were pinioned, and he could not even " said a voice in a deep and fearful whis- party to your arrest?" move but tongue or limb a dozen "Ha! hast thou feeling, fellow !- lect. He took the citizen's extended hand.

est moment the latter muttered, "by---1 spr! his face and dress are not in characfor a moment. Who-what are you! What I have done some damage." an you hisher! Sneak " prisoner paused; to conceal his name es and he avowed it. A college-man here, and at midnight !

A women

A woman! Pish! you are a spy." Am not by Heaven !" · The pwof.

द्रक्षणस्य

Describe them." The prisoner did so accu. smile.

The mast be removed for a short time from Cert propher. Do you agree th stare no other chance. Give me my black-Describent his identity," said another voice,

" PERSON IS A tell one." Remove to mill said the first speaker. All he

"The locked op, and left in total darkness to milar! e.etdguedn nwo eid daw sagerae the a quantity of earthern flower pots cape!" a spade which he found among the tools table dwelling.

and a stranger stood before him. Two, he was wrong. The person was a observation of the pseudo-callorthing the captive expected to have seen. His years ago, and as they appear at present, there is a sevinced in its furniture and decoration, formed a dress was plain but respectable, and being unat- striking difference. Then, the alumni of "the un-striking contrast to the wealthy, but vulgar display, tended, and without weapons, to guess at his "in- divided Trinity," were chiefly sons of the nobili- so apparent in the rest of the mansion. There tents" from his looks, they were most "charitable." The fallen bars and broken casement did not escape his observation, and he smiled as he riewed, the prisoner's handiwork.

and the same of

and his munder was inevitable. Could be have contributed their regular quota to the King's tant from their hive, the students received personal exchequer. Such was the case to night. You mementos from the hands of the irritated burwere unluckily in the way, and your disguise, and ghers. the number of his enemies. Could he but the very strange place you chose to visit, on such

Purcell looked grave as he thought on the peri

"Really, Mr. Downing," for as such the visiter er tound the heat upon his face, and the stream meditation in a garden house. There was one the proprietor. penetrated through the folds of the ban- gentleman , to appeared to me the principal per-They were scrutinizing his countenance, former; he was not only liberal in threats, but door opened, and some one came in, whose en- Opposite to him, a man was seated whom he had thought it advisable to give me a foretaste of the trance caused a sensation amongst the company, not previously observed; he was introduced as pleasure of being poinarded. I certainly hold my- "Mrs. Downing," was repeated in different Monsieur Chattelain. His dress and demeanor self his debtor to the amount of a broken head .- keys from the fire-place. "It's the old boy's were grave, and from his general look the student when and a strong arm shook Purcell's By Saint George, if we ever clear scores he shall belpmate," said Purcell; "some awful antiquity concluded that he was some priest or physician. der; "you have not ten minutes' life if you have the principal with honest interest. But I fear in brown bombasin and laced furbelows;" and, But his manners were very different from those of enemies.

and I will introduce you to my wife and friends. enquire what brought you to the extraordinary place where my people met you !"

Excuse me, I cannot tell, for I really don't portant, and might facilitate his discovering the the unknown one! r ner name. It I did I would not tell you." | name and residence of that mysterious fair one.

that are we to know that you are Mr. Pur- more populous parts of the town; its extreme lone- with her visiter. She returned his confused com- his situation, and leaving the result to fate, he con-Lya at my watch; my crest and cipher are der the few dilapidated dwellings it contains a fa- tered some disjointed excuses for the unavoidable have warned him to avoid. Accordingly each day firmed; an incident, at one of their private vourite and secure receptacle for thieres and rag- | absence of her husband. The wave examined, and its value added abonds. In daylight it is unsafe for a well dressed Liminal explance to the veracity of the cap- passenger to be seen there; and at night, none but then married? and by that solitary word the stu- host occupied his time with little intermission, un-Fire and further, you must remain a close they told me, when your flight was so unexpected. She geally forgotten him! Her blash said, no. _ | the presence of another. ly interrupted."

are paces aw, and you shall have a differ his escape. The citizen shuddered. "Your life," ded. In a low voice he apologised for his dress: Igh convent in Normandy, and after the revolution The heard, is brave and daring; and you were exposed to. Good God, sir, what to Mis Downing, he should have been more sur- of the times made the existence of any religious with the heart. Hers had been hitherto untouched; brought you there !"

realized means to quell the loudest tongue. | and war, he determined not to stick too closely to mory was discarded with the dress? the truth. "He shall know," thought the college-"Sing Parcell was lifted from the ground-a | man, "the true cause of many of my adventures,

"Not I, truly," said Mr. Dawning, with a good door." At how passed, the rain ceased, the wind died natured smile. "Not I; some abominable course-117, 200, Wat the suddenness of a summer san: Women of depraved habits, they tell me, the lary of the elements subsided as ra- are often seen there. There is a flash house in his reserved its placed blue, not a cloud re- planned, and where thieres meet and divide their room. and not puring on a treacherous serenity, it plunder. Good God what an escape! Come We seem and boly as it it had never been along sir. My concerns here are very entensive. looked cantiously around. No one was visible. The back of my garden opens by a wicket door She pointed to a chamber, and in a rapid whis-Personal by the light to examine the into this hopeful labyrinth, for its lanes and passa- per said,ere of his confinement, and from implements in ges are most intricate. Preserve us! what an es-because, he conjectured that the place of So saying he led Parcell through the garden exceeded was a gardener's house. His next they entered a next shrubbery and flower-knot, were turned upon escape. The window then passing into a conservatory, the citizen introhe coliderently secured by iron stannehions, duced his new acquaintance to a large and comforban, a door jured at a little distance, a plain, inclegant, business-looking personages; and Ring the beil, any thing you require will be brought If Percell had formed an idea of encountering the consumeres of part of the company, What

Between the feelings and characters of the mem-

gentlemen of estate, and men of liberal professions; a few of those of the mercantile class were found. Now the case is reversed. At the former "Upon my word, Mr. Purcell, you have not period, with a very few exceptions, the students been unemployed. Had I delayed my visit I had arrived at manhood before their college course should have been minus a window and a prisoner. had closed. At the present day, from the extreme Come, sir, your captivity is at an end; and I hope youth of the members, the university assumes the you will forgive an intringement on the liberty of appearance of an overgrown school. Previous to the subject, as perpetrated this night on your per- the rebellion, the students of Trinity College were of the chamber. Porcell gazed upon with it rap- thusiasm of the day! and the wild and delusive roson. Your incarceration, sir, originated in a ridi- proud, overbearing, and aristocratic. They looked ture. There was the deep blue eye-that bright, mance of liberty had seized upon a yourg and ferculous, but, you will probably confess, a natural down upon the citizens as persons of interior birth, mistake. The fact is simply this. I am a trader, and ungentlemanly tastes and habits; and, accorand must acknowledge that occasionally I admit dingly, many a raid was made from the college up- lip, that concealed teeth of pearl-like whiteness— dentity, then, did the beautiful enthusiast enter into and dispose of certain commodities which may not on the city; and, in return, when belated or dis-

Porcell's was a noted name as a leader of those see the ligature that bound his arms he would at- a night, and at such an hour, caused you to be dreaded and desperate youths. Many an assault on to rescore himself; if he failed, he might as suspected by some wild hands, which this danger, and battery had he inflicted and endured; and now perish here as be slaughtered in that haunt of our traffic makes necessary, and your detention smarting from a recollection of his imprisonment. the from which he had but just escaped. He was the consequence. Had I been there the thing in penetrating which, he suspected the group round set to free his hands; the effort partially succeed could not have occurred; your parole of honor the fire to have been principale, his pride took fire was difficult to comprehend. His musing was in- wards assumed. Many untoward circumstances d the bandage slackened sensibly, when one of would have been a sufficient guarantee. Am I at the gross insult which their meaning look concaptors perceived his design. " By the God of pardoned for having been, though inadvertently a, veyed; and determined to seize the earliest opportunity to resent it, he turned his back contempts. ously upon the company and employed himself in sets shall meet in your heart!" And as he his wild visit had exposed him to; but it over, and examining certain portraits of Washington, Lucas ake, a smart prick of a keen weapon made the it was just the kind of adventure he loved to recol- and Dean Swift, which, in gloriously-gilt frames. hung from the walls of the anartment.

From these similitudes of patriotism, the stu-While this passed, others of the party held a had announced himself, "the fault was all my own, dent's eye wandered round the room. It was med kind of consultation. "Being me the lan- I came here on an errand as wild as bootless; and well lighted, the furniture expensive, rather than her wound; and taking some sticking-plaster from said the roice of one who appeared to in. it I have paid the penalty of my indiscretion, my well chosen, the carpet rich, the sideboard loaded his host, he covered the sore, and buttoning his punishment was trifling, being limited to an hour's with plate, and all he saw attested the wealth of jacket so as to conceal the stain upon his shirt, fol-

"Never mind, Mr. Purcell, never mind, we being present, he continued, with studied incliffer, manding; his conversation lively and intelligent. shall redily repair the window. Your exercise rence, to admire the patriots upon the wall, and Before the meal was over Purcell felt himself irreof his midnight ramble to himself. He hoped to his eyes encountered those of a young and beautiful woman. Heavens and earth! there stood the Was was the person you came here to meet to acquaintance with his family would be locally im- cause of all his anxiety and danger—there stood Fall endergib. Do you know S _____, and F whose beauty had so nearly proved disastrous to unexpected meeting, the effect upon his fair incog. pied his thoughts and haunted his dreams. A character so ardent and impetuous was ill adapted and he mentioned several him. "And was there any thing singular in my nits was positively electric. The blood rushed to colder character might have taken timely alarm, being a wanderer in the place your friends found the surface, and one deep blush covered her from and avoided the danger of encouraging a growing if not subdued, would assuredly terminate in their me!" said the college-man with an inquisitive the brow to the bosom; for a moment she did not passion for one whom fortune had placed beyond mutual misery. She would have avoided him, but t "Indeed there was. It is an outlet from the had resolved to reject all previous acquaintances ardent disposition was insensible to the peril of visits; and Madeline was thus prevented from liness, though continuous to the busier streets, ren- pliments with a low and formal courtesy, and mut- linued visiting the person whom predence would that she was not insensible to his reprosches. She tection to the daughter of that prince, who had second-ne believed it was the small one in and a multitude of my mishaps, but as to facts I raised her eyes-they met the student's, and in a lately married the gallant and unfortunate Lord The was carried inside, and then desired shall not be over accurate;" and accordingly he moment he could have knelt at her teet, and sup- Edward Frizgerald. Wit referen his conductors. The smooth gra- gave Mr. Downing a most confused narrative, of plicated pardon for harboring a thought, or express. Madeline was an inmate of Lord Edward's fami-

> " Let me reccommend you to have it examined. Allow me to show you to a dressing-room," and,

As they ascended the stairs, the lady of the bouse murder was nearly a miracle. Ah! Mr Porcell, why did you come here! But fate, which threw you so opportunely in my way, seems determined and those hours which a younger husband would that our acquaintance, so singular in its origin, shall have allowed to domestic enjoyment, were consumcontinue. My husband knows the particulars of ed in prosecuting a conspiracy to overthrow the blessings here and hereafter may arrend you is the apor, which to one of them had already been progbecause his operation silently. In a few Within, there was an appearance of wealth and my late adventure, but is ignorant of my late pre- limb government. Madeline felt no disappointment prayer of the a bar fell from the window, and proved display, with a total absence of any thing bearing server's home. Let it remain so; we never met The exercision of the exercision. He worked with re- an air of tashion. Mr. Downing led the way to a before, remember that, I see you have not displeased for heartless marriage, and energy: a second one yielded, and the spacious eating room. There a table was laid played the token of my gratitude; never let that and too young to feel anything but friendship for the ground one yielded, and the spacious cating room. Incre a table was table was table was table with an assessment, and the relapsing into itom followed, and with an assessment, Purcell gaw to some read with easily wine we amount of the first winds and with small reserve to the first winds and with small reserve to the first winds and with small reserve to the first winds and the first winds a

his horsess had conducted him, he was surprised ty, members of the House of Commons, country was a harp, a piano, and other musical instruments;

Among some paintings of exquisite beauty, one speaking eye; there, too, was the rich profusion of vid imagination. Her protector was coming to liemutual attachment an impossibility! What could dence. have caused this sacrifice ! There was some hidden secret involving this ill-assorted union which it Madaline had brought him the disguise he after terrupted; a heavy step approached, and Mr. Downing entered.

must appear unpardonable. Madeline tells me you are wounded; let me look at it."

"A scratch, sir-a mere scratch!" and baring his breast, the student discovered that the skin had been elightly punctured. "Pshaw! sir," he continued, " your lady's bodkin would make a deadlowed Mr. Downing to the supper-room.

Purcell was placed beside the lady of the house with affected ignorance of the lady of the house the other guests; his address was courtly and com-

Love had already made wild work in Porcell's If the student's estonishment was great at this heart. Madeline, the beautiful Madeline, occuraise her eyes, and when she did, it appeared she the possibility of his possessing. But the student's her husband tor political purposes, encouraged his produced some apology for repairing to Downing's Her husband! Gracious Heaven! Was she house; and as the mercantile avocations of the felons or the police would venture within its infa. Ident's air-built castle was overthrown. The pang fortunately for Stephen Purcell, his interviews with mous precincts. You were apparently pursued, of deep disappointment gave way to pique. Had Madeline were long, and generally uncontrolled by

Then she was ungrateful; and in one short day his Madeline was the orphan child of an officer in "I was ;" and Purcell related the particulars of services were forgotten. Purcell's prole was woon- the frish brigade. She was educated at an Enghad you tailed, was not worth a farthing's purchase. ["Had he anticipated the honor so unexpectedly had broken out, had the misfortune to lose her fath.] had wedded without a sentiment beyond respect, My blood runs cold when I think of the danger conferred upon him, the hono; of being presented or who felt in the battle of Arcola. The temper had learned, too late, how dangerous it is to triffe tably attited; but people would occasionally be community in France impossible. That of Saint | but now, when to love was criminal, she, for the The question was a shrewd one. Purcell hesi- found in dishabitle. Till to night he had never Generate was dispersed, and the inmates obliged first time, felt there was a being, for whom, had This are him like a gentleman; if not, you tated; but considering the latitude allowed in love known its advantages, for he observed that the me- to seek a shelter in another kingdom. Madeline's her will been free, she would have declined a diafather had once been in the Duke of Orlean's | dem ! While he spoke, the lady's varying color showed household, and in her distress she applied for pro-

etal and ite smell of the plants an appointment at the theatre, and a very minute ing a word, that could disquiet her. Suddenly she by when Mr. Downing, with others of the Irish dethree rendered more powerful by the eve- description of a short woman with black eyes; exclaimed—" You are burt, sir; there is blood up- legates, had an interview with the French authori- ful wite of Downing, he took it from the wall, place the confirmed his suspicious Finding he white teeth, and a chinchilla moff and tiffet; grave- on your breast." Purcell turned his eyes careless- ties at Hamburgh. There Madeline and he accithe state of the infamous den from which by concluding with an enquiry from the citizen by to the spot. His shirt was elightly spotted. He dentally met. Downing was opulent and respects. house that held the woman whom he idolized. the captive's Aurdiesse revived - whether he had the pleasure of an acquaintance smiled. The wound is not incurable, I trust; as ble, and enthusiastic in politics, and one for whom to a stronger into a house, unbound, unbooked, with any lady whose dress and charms were side worthy friend of mine would express it. Tis Lord Edward had a high personal regard. Strock straction he paced his cheerless chamber; "he not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church- with the charms of the beautiful and unprotected look no no so time;" his servant spoke to him, conceiving that wealth would atone for other disadwith a look which bade him follow ker, she took and pressed his suit with andom. Seconded by the dres; it was the band-writing of Madeline; he be admitted an hour before the larger body should The moon shone out, that hannt of infamy, a place where robberies are a taper from the side-board and left the supper- powerful interterence of his noble triend, Madeline's objections to a union in which her heart was unconcerned were removed and Downing returned to Ireland the hosband of the beautiful boarder of Sain Geneviere.

A year passed over, and Downing's thoughts became absorbed in the ruinous politics of the times. " What madness have you not been guilty of !-Good God! Downing told me your escape from His vanity might have been gratified by being the husband of one so lovely and accomplished as at the change; in fact, it was rather a reisel. No leisure in the exercise of those eleganf are the had " gazing on vacancy." Night came on ; a tap was special, and admired them into Do string's garden. the when the state of the door beld a short parhar of the and perfectly opposite to any bers of the Irish university as they existed thirty was a lady's bondour; and the pure and classic tasts pourous Downing and his wife seldom met ten in aught occurred to intercourse rather resembled that of a child and parent, than the warmer intimacy of wedded life. Gratitude and affection towards her quondam pro-

and a large collection of written and printed music | tector, Lord Edward, continued unabated in Madefilled the stands. Books, magnificantly bound, line's breast. The delicate and generous aftention were disposed in resewood exbinets; and several she had experienced in her destitution, and the frefine specimens of sculpture adorned the mantel. quent opportunities which, while a member of his family, she had possessed, of seeing and estimating the chivalrous traits of character of that gifted little portrait attracted the student's undivided ad- but mhappy nobleman, had made a lasting immiration; it was a likeness of the lovely occupant pression. She, too, had imbibed much of the inchesnut ringlets; the Grecian mose; the full red land, the hero and liberator of his country. Arand he had pressed that lip! And with that thought her husband's plaus for sheltering the noble leader came the maldening recollection that she was of the conspiracy; and by frequent instances of another's. Good Heaven! could that lovely girl firmness in danger, with the ready resources of a have wedded the elderly and homely person he woman's wit, she proved that the secret of Lord had seen ! Did that young beauty bloom for one Edward's concealment had been intrusted to one whose years and habits rendered the existence of well-worthy of this proud but dangerous confi-

On the night of Lord Edward's arrival in the city delayed her, and she was returning after executing her perilous errand, when her arrest before the col-1 ask your pardon, Mr. Purcell; my neglect lege gates occurred. Purcell's timely interference saved her from the consequences of detection, and tormed the basis of a future intimacy which proved deeply disastrons to both,

Meanwhile the attempts of the executive to discover the retreat of the rebel leader were unsuccessful. Rewards and espionage produced no disclosures calculated to lead to his detection. De Chattelain sometimes joined the student during constant visits at Downing's; and, delighted with the floor maensible. his spirited and entertaining acquaintance, Porcell's admiration of his talents and information momently interested in the passing events which engrossed

The result of Purcell's daily interviews with the beautiful Madeline may be easily conjectured. He to enable him to move about the park. became the victim of a deep and devouring love; must have given you an appetite; supper is ready, occupy himself with an accurate survey of the sistably impelled towards the agreeable foreigner; an unaccumtable change in habits and disposition occupy himself with an accurate survey of the sistanty imperior accurate survey of the sistanty in the But, if my question be not impertinent, might I There was a whispering at the fire; a light step whole attention was engrossed by Madiline and the deserted; in the commons hall be was never seen; she had striven, and perhaps succeeded in forget-There was a whispering at the hire; a light step; whole anchor was engineered in torgetcrossed the room. "Here comes old bombasin," intelligent person beside her. At a late hour he and he now avoided the nightly carousals of the ting him. His spirits left him; his once ruddy bre muttered the student; and turning slowly round, took a reluctant leave, and with unfeigned delight, wild youths of the university, where, but lately, he of health faded from his cheek; he became nervous The student had determined to keep the secret with determined nonchalence, within two paces accepted Mr. Downing's warm invitation to visit had been the presiding spirit. In his chambers be and wretched; but, the traces, of mental anguish him frequently, with an assurance that a cover at was seldom found, and his most intimate friends on his countenance were supposed to proceed from table should be reserved for his young friend, were totally astounded at the marvellous and saidden change in Stephen Purcell.

With pain Madeline remarked the progress of the student's passion. She rightly judged that a to struggle against a growing attachment; which, adopting the only salutary course of conduct she could pursue. Her suspicions were soon coninterviews, harried the student's feelings beyond the power of control, as he flung himself at her feet, and in a wild and unconnected thansour owned how desperately and honelessly he loved her. She fled from him; he would have detained her; but she broke from him, and retired to her chamber to seek relief in solitude and team. She went for the frenzied passion of her unhappy lover; but, alas! Madeline might weep for berself! She, who Purceil for a while remained powerless as a statute. Madeline was gone; gone torever! His insame disclosure had insulted her beyond the chance of being appeared. All was over! He took a last look at the boodour he should never again enter; and his eyes resting on the likeness of the beauti ed it in his bosom, rushed down stairs, and left the Evening came; in a state of melancholly aborphan, the trader forgot the disparity of years, and but he was unheard or cohecoled. He put a note while, soon after, the house and neighboring streets rato its maner's hand; but there it remained uno- would be surrounded by a military force. The chovantages, he declared his admiration to its objects per ed. Casually, Purcell's eyes turned on the adhastily broke the seal, and red the following words: " Purceil, farewell !-- we meet no more ! Your honor, and my peace of mind, requires this from both of us. I alone am blameable. What I had reason to suspect, I should have prevented; and, the fall into the hands of his enemies, his intention by adopting a course now unavoidable, I should of never being taken alive was no secret. To arhave spared some suffering to you, and much the rest him, therefore, was a service of normall peril; availing misery to myself. Break off all intimacy disloyality-and make this, or any other plea, a active babis and established courage, the dangepretext for declining his father acquaintance. I rous duty was assigned. Madeline; but love was not a leading passion i would confess the trath to him, and save you the ter, without including him in a misfortune of which I have been the sole cause. Fare thee well! that the police officer in allence, and approached the

" Peprive your soversignty of ressou.

And draw you just maderes ?"

" Jack," said the student mournfully, " leav re. I am company for none but a maniac. Lag vretched, Jack, truly wrotched."

"Pshaw! Stephen, nonsense; what the devit ias happened!—some mishap; but sirely we can emedy it. Have you been-" and looking ear restly at his Inend, he mimicked the rattling of a dice-box.

"No. no. no: 'tis here and here," and Parcel essed his heart and head convulsively.

" In love by the shade of Mark Antony! Ha! na! ha! and is Stephen Porcell turned into a meyring school-boy ! He cries because Chine will not consent to drop into his arms like an over-rine nedlar. Would she not have thee without the narson's benison ! "Oh most pernicious woman!" Come make me thy confidant, and " by the simplicity of Venus' doves," we'll have her though we commit a burglary "

" Ah. Jack, my case is desperate ?"

"Then take the remedy that never failed, wing -wine-wine! You have deserted your hiends; some say you are getting mad; others, that you are turning traitor. Come along, the lads are waiting. Without you there has been " a gap in our great feast? and Purcell allowing himself to be led off without resistance. Jack Middleton continued favoring him with excellent advice, and quotations from his darling Shakspeare, until they reached the guard room, where his presence was hailed by a cheer of welcome.

Purcell had eaten nothing since morning; and he drank with avidity the wine pressed upon him by his friends. The tower of his mind rendered him unable a debauch ; his vision failed ; his brain burned; and, to the surprise of his companions, directly after the cloth was removed, he tell upon

His fall was ascribed to intoxication; but, fortuincreased. The foreigner appeared singularly unthe thoughts of all save himself, but signified un the night beside his bed. His ravings confirmed him carried to his chambers, and remained during feigned astonishment at the success with which the the student's suspicious; and the morning found chief conspirator evaded the incessant efforts of his him feverish and exhausted. Farther assistance was premo it administered; and, after a confinement of a few days, Porcell recovered sufficiently

No tidings of Madeline reached him since there parted. Indeed; that silence was natural; her to bodily indisposition, and none but Jack. Middleto and his medical attendant guessed that his ailment was " a mind diseased."

The former seldom left his friend alone; and en the night of the 17th of May he entered Purcell's rooms so muffled up, as for a time rendered recognition difficult. " Are we alone, Stephano?"

"We are: My servant is gone for a book st Harlow's library "Lead me your ear, Stephen; we leave this ere midnight, on a secret expedition-Lord Edward is betraved !" "Berrayed ! is it possible?"

"True; we are certain of success; and before the clock strikes one the traitor will be a prisoner, or dead. You must come with us. Half a dozen of the lads are selected for the work, and good Stephano, thou art one."

"Yes, you; are you unwilling? On, we can fill your place readily."

The student's face reddened. "Nay, Siephen, I but jested. Come arm year. self, we go disguised; pustols are the thing; a grea coat conceals them."

"Where is the place, Jack!"

" Some nook of Thomas Street : but we have a guide." Purcell's nerves jarred as Middleton named the street; but an irresissible impulse organitim to visit again the neighborhood which had proved so fatal to his peace. Taking a case of pistols from a drawer, he examined their flints and primings; and having secured them in a waist-beil, put on a watch-coat and accompanied his companion.

It was striking ten o'clock. Middleton led way to an apartment within the guard room, where the party consisting of lour students and a civil officer. were already waiting for them. The plan they were to pursue was simple, a servant had disclosed Lord Edward's retreat and would admit them privately into the premises by a back entrance; sen text who were to arrest the rebel chief were to appear, as troops moving at a late hour in that direction might cause an alarm, and frustrate the attempt. Aware of the certainty of his fate, should and a limited number of the college corps, men of

Two backner-coaches conveyed the party to the end of Thomas Street; then alighting they to:lowed " Mangarage name with adventure. At the contance of the well-The sindent read the billet over and over, and remembered siley the guide passed, looked anxthen, with an effort of extraordinary self-possession, locally round, and the next moment plunged into he calmly wrote the lener it demanded. He dest the gloomy passage. Maidleton and his compan-

when the student was presented to them of the student's side, then large with the officer, and immediately after section to the chamber of personnel was visible on and next-minment be heard ber return to the chamber of the student's side, then large with the officer, and immediately after section. trader furnished her with unbounded means for col- unking his absent triend on the shoulder, Jack Mid- through the garden. The guide briefly informed Restricts of a stem gasler in those of the ever caused the circumstance, it did not except the constant of the constant of the constant of the ever caused the circumstance, it did not except the bouloit and drawing toom became repositories for "In the name of deep tragedy, I conjure thee. | 12 he swellaine.] the proper time for conducting every elegancy in the arts. With each opposite What, ho! Suphano! art thou slive, man ? or has an into the house. He would communicate with