We have published from time to time a number of arieles to show the the value of apples as food for stock, and have always entertained the opinion that they possess very high qualities in this respect. The following article, taken from the Albany Cul tivator, giving the experiments of Mr. Payne Wingate, for the accuracy of which the editor events to rouch, is worthy of the attention of our readers, at this time, when the crop of apples is about matur - ing. and is an abundant :

The fate Papie Wingate, of Hallowell. Maine, made some experiments in freding pigs with apples, compared with potatoes. Both the apples and polations were boiled, or rather stawed, superstely, and about four quarts of oat and pea meat mixed with each bushel, at the time the cooking was finshed—the meal being intimately incorporated with an object of pity to behold. My friends had been sent the potatoes and apples while they were hot, and the mass left to ferment, slightly, before it was led to the pigs.

Two pigs of the same litter, and as near as prac ticable of the same weight, were taken; one was were weighed, and the food was reversed-the pig to which polatoes had been given, was fed with apples, and the one which had received apples was upon my lungs. fed for the next week on potatoes. This course continued through several weeks-the food of each pig being changed every week. The result was the apples proved to be fully equal, or somewhat superior to the potatoes. In this instance the apnles were mostly sweet, and they, as well as the potatoes, were nearly in a ripe state.

My strength improved, He found that when they were fed raw to swine and I regained my flesh. the aweet apples were preferable—the animals are them better, as the sour japples seemed to make their teeth sore; but when both were cooked and was no difference in the gain produced by an equal quantity of each. I should be stated, however, that all the applea used were palatable kinds, nearly ripe; and that unripe, and ill flavored apples, are known to be less relished by stock, as well as less nutritive. It is propable, also, that when sour epthe animal may take into the stomach too large at amount of acid, which may tend to derange the diated by cooking, and the saccharine fermentation, going statement for the benefit of suffering mankind by which the pulp loses much of its acid and is nearly sweet. It does not appear from analysis that the amount of actual nourishment is much greater in sweet than in sour apples.

Mr. Wingate practiced fattening swine for several years, on food composed principally of apples The animals attained good weights and the pork was solid and of excellent qualities. In other instances, we have known apples fed raw to horses, last wint, r, so that they give him rp to die; that he cows, and other stock through the winter, with his recovery was produced by Schenck's Pulmonic much advantage. For using in this way sweet apples would probably be best, and they should be each as would keep till spring. They may be stor ed in a cellar under the barn, or in the bottom of the hay mow-a proper place having been left for that purpose when the hay was put in. They will be more likely to be injured by heating than by tierzing. They will seldom freeze in such a situation as is mentioned; and if they should be touched by frost, their nutritive properties will not be above Philadelphia, being well acquainted with John much lessened, if they remain in a dark place, and the circumstances attending his case, where they will thaw slowly where they will thaw slowly.
