The Rumored Death of Nicholas of Russia.

If we are to believe the news brought by the last arrival from England, Nicholas of Russia has submitted to the common fate of all men. There are some who doubt the report of his death, circulated as it was in England just as the steamer was about leaving Liverpool, withto the 26th of Eebruary, brought down by out giving time to confirm its authenticity or to show its falsehood. The doubters class it with the wing rumors of the fall of Sebastopol and the assassination of the Emperor of the French, which, not very long since, had a short currency among us. It is well, no doubt, to withhold absolute credit from all rumors of an important nature coming to us under such circumstances till the proofs of their truth arrive; but it is proper to remark that the eached San Francisco, on the 17th of Febru- death of Nicholas, at any time within the last w, causing a great run on the house, which six months, has been much more likely to hapwever, was promptly met, and over half a pen than the taking of Sebastopol, or the assassination of Napoleon the Third. He had embarked in an undertaking on which he had a few days, their creditors having granted staked the integrity of his empire, with all its mighty resources, and which could leave him no repose till he had either added European Turkey, with its magnificent capital, to his dominions or until he had seen some of his fairest provinces wrested from him and his empire reduced to a power of the second rank. That he should be taken off by an apopletic stroke in the midst of these projects and dangers, is no more improbable in itself than that the same thing should happen to a Prime Minister of England.

has desired to elevate the condition of the humbler classers, but always in such a manner as should consist with the preservation of all the powers of the government, both nominal and actual. He has desired to civilize the country in such a manner as should exclude the action of public opinion upon the government, and prevent the people from questioning the wisdom of its commands and the propriety of obedience, even in their hearts.— He has always regarded with a certain contempt the other governments of Europe in which the sovereign finds himself sometimes compelled to defer to the public will, as recogising two sources of power inconsistent with each other, and as resting upon an insecure compromise between despotism and liberty.-In whatever he may have done to civilize his people, he has allowed no partnership of individual co-operation; that the people, as they must look to no other master, may also see no other benefactor than the government. If his reign has closed, the principle of absolutism has lost its most rigid interpreter in the civilized world, as well as the man who enforced it most remorselessly, cruelly and ably.

Whether the heir of Nicholas is likely to be swayed by his uncle of Prussia to more pacific counsels than prevailed with his father, is a question which gives some room for conjecture. The Prussian monarch had no influence over Nicholas, and even stood in awe of him. We are yet to see whether his wishes, which are Sam Patch Outdone.—At Patterson's Falls supposed to be in favor of peace, will have any effect upon the milder temper of his son .-

THREE DOLLARS, and is therefore within the means of every man who plants half an acre of ground. It is simple in its construction, and executes its work with accuracy and despatch on various kinds of soil.

Unlike other planters, it has no gearing to get out of repair, but is carried in the hand like a cane, and can be worked up hill or down; as well as on level ground, planting as much ground in a day as five men can with hoes—
It may also be used to plant beans, as it can be guaged to drop as few or as many kernels as desired. It is meeting with unprecedented success everywhere it is introduced, having been presented at several Agricultural fairs, and always without exception received the highest premium, being the best and cheapest implement of the kind in use.
