France and England, after vainly insisting on the unconditional reduction of the Russian power, admit that Russia's propositions are "worthy of consideration." the more so that Austria has definitely refused to second the Western powers in their "humiliating demands" on the Czar. It is now generally confessed, although reluctantly, that the utmost to be expected from Austria is the maintenance of a strict neutrality. Lord John Russell and Drouyn de l'Huys, had been ordered

There is already a deficiency of £23,000,000 sterling to be met, on which account additional taxation is to be laid on sugar, tea, coffee, rum, British spirits, stamps, and incomes.

Austria refuses to urge the Claims of the Allies against Russia .- All hopes of Austria taking the field against Russia appear to be at an end, for the present. Among the conflicting rumors, that which appeared to bear the most consistency was, that Austria refuses to demand from Russia any concessions, further than these three :-- 1st. The Russian fleet in the Black Sea to remain in statu quo. It is said at present to consist of three ships of the line and four steam frigates. 2d. The Western powers to have Consuls at Sebastopol, who are be under the immediate protection of their Ministers residing at St. Petersburg. 3d. THE NORTH BRANCH.

The following bill passed the Legislature and has become a law. Should Mr. MAFFET accept the office, the public have every guarantee that all that a faithful discharge of its responsibilities, combined with great experience can do to make the North Branch navigable, will be performed by him. We are rejoiced to see a plan adopted, in regard to this work, which will remove much of the mismanagement experienced by other portions of the public improvements. by creating a responsibility which is to be assumed by a man who has some regard to his reputation-by removing every inducement to prostitute the Canal into a piece of political machinery, and giving the office a permanency which the appointees of the Canal Commissioners can never feel. We are satisfied that the interests of the Commonwealth and of the public concerned in the operation of the North Branch, (particularly the dealers in coal) demanded some inovation upon the old manner of conducting the public works-and if Mr. MAF-FET but half sustains his previous reputation, he will realize all the expectations now formed of his ability.

An act to provide for the repairs and completion of the North Branch canal from Pittston northward.

Death of an Old Settler.

Obituary.

Died, in Towanda township, Penna., April 15th, Mr оны Fox, in the 77th year of his age. As the family of the deceased was the first that settled in this town, some account of their ing the usual business, Court adjourned until early experience may not be uninteresting to the community : especially as the subject of our first settlers is now receiving increasing and merited attention.

REDOLPH Fox, the father of the deceased came to this place and settled near the mouth of the Towanda Creek, about the year 1770 The precise date cannot now be ascertained .-He had no white neighbors nearer than Tioga which a small stream found its way into the Towanda near its mouth.

The trials and privations incident to the settling of a new country were somewhat aggra. vated by the proximity of the Indians. As Mr. Fox, however, purchased his land of them at a satisfactory price, they were disposed to be friendly. But when the revolution broke out this feeling of the Indians began to change.by adventurers from the North, who were employed or encouraged by the British government. It is supposed to have been some of bably 1777, as he was in search of his strayed cattle. For nine months his family were inig. norance of his fate. At one time the Indians, who were now quite frequent visitors, and withal very troublesome, informed the family that Mr. Fox was killed, because he was not a good King's man. Mrs. Fox was now compelled to secrete whatever the Indians might fancy, in order to keep it from their depredations : especially was this the case with provisions. In deed, so watchful were they of an opportunity to plunder in this line, that the family were compelled to pass the whole day without food and at night partake of their refreshments in the cellar.

In December, at the commencement of a very cold night, a call was heard from the opposite side of the river, which Mrs. Fox instantly recognised as the voice of her husband! But how should he cross the river? A boat or a canoe was a luxury which the Indians did not allow the family to keep. To force a raft thro' He was compelled to encamp for the night within call of his family ; the most painful night probably, to them all, that they suffered during tense had been the cold, the ice was frozen quite across the river, so that he ventured over

The cries of the babe (Rudolph) added to the danger, so that more than once the mother took him up to throw him overboard, desperate, but apparently only means of escaping discovery, and the massacre of the whole family. But the mother's feelings predominated over every sense of danger. She could not consult safety at such a sacrifice !-They succeeded in passing the Indians and continued their flight to Sunbury-where JOHN, the subject of this obituary, was born. Of the nine horses with which they set out, they arrived with two, those upon which Mr. Fox and his assistant rode. After remaining a year or two in Sunbury, they returned as far as Wilkes-barre, whene Mr. Fox and four of his children proceeded to present week, in the Court House, to very large their old home on the Towanda. They found the ashes of their buildings. Where they had left their stacks of grain, there lay also a bed of ashes, from which they could stir up the remains of charred straw. A bark covered cabin was constructed and such other preparation made for bringing the family as circumstances permitted. When ready to return for the re mainder of the family, the question arose, who will remain and take care of the house? To leave it unoccupied appeared the sure way to undertaking could scarcely be proposed. A young maiden of thirteen years, on the spot where their former dwelling had been laid i ashes by a savage foe, surrounded by neighbors of the same character and blood, offers to be the sole occupant of the premises for ten dars, -the time supposed to be necessary for bringing up the family. But it was cheerfully un dertaken, and trials unexpected and unprovid ed for except by Him who is the sovereign dis poser of all events, awaited her. The mother was found too ill to be removed, and a delay of more than a month was unavoidable. Pro visions ran short with the little girl. A beat's crew from Newtown, called, and urged her i accompany them. She obtained of them a small supply of provisions and waited for the arriva of the family. The visits she had from the la dians, and the expedients she adopted to keep her small store of provisions safe, we cannot now detail. One night she was surprised by a fierce attack upon her bark-covered cabin.-Nothing daunted, she immediately set about kindling a fire. The unceremonious visitor soon departed.
