An Extraordinary Appetite.

Charles Sumner, M. D., of Rochester, communicated the following particulars of a surgical case which came under his practice, to the Daily Union of that city:

"The subject was a young lady, nineteen rears of age, of nervous temperament, very ealthy, and the daughter of a respectable farer in Butternuts, Otsego county, N. Y. She rst came to my office April 28th, 1853, to are a needle extracted from her left arm, left arm, left sold from her ving a bundle of carpeting.' This, a medisized sewing-needle, was soon found, and racted from the interior side of the forem, about midway between the wrist and the bow. A CARD.—Thursday last was a day ever memorable in the history of the citizens of Monroeton, for the exhibition of liberality, taste, and good feeling. These amiable traits of character were evinced in doing honor to, and in conferring a substantial kindness on the subscriber. This occasion, which took place at the hospitable homestead of deacon J. Homer, was the more note-worthy, as it was the fourth of the sort which had taken place in their midst during the present season, the interests of the other ministers in the Borough having been wisely considered. The manner in which the whole was conducted would have done credit to city-life anywhere. For this expression of very kind feeling, the subscriber and his family would hereby return their sincere and grateful thanks—while it is his prayer that the graat Giver of every good and every perfect gift may abundantly reward those friends in the bestowment of all needed temporal and spiritual blessings.
