this brood of animals through a hard winter. For many years we have not known such extensive attacks on young fruit trees, and it becomes us to repeat what we have before published in regard to the attacks of mice. common winters if attention is given to beat down the first snows that come so as to make a hard bottom around the trunks, the mice are not apt to do much mischief. But in such a winter as the last they would not be driven away by such a process. They were so cornered that they mounted upon the tops of the the snow-banks to avoid starvation, and lived upon bark of all kinds that was within their dent to look to fruit trees repeatedly and watch the vermin. Trees standing near stone walls are most exposed, and much attention must be paid to them in most eases where mice are pormitted to range the fields and barns without a hunter. Cats are about as useful on some farms as some other stock, and when a suitable number of cats are kept there will be but little danger of mischief from mice.

But in all cases it is prudent to rake away all kinds of litter from the surface around the trees, or to bury it up with loam, gravel, or other earthly matter. We advise to throw up a little bank around each young tree—for this will not only keep the mice away but will keep the trunk steady and crect till the proper time comes to level the mound and leaves the soll more light than if nothing had been done.

The expense of throwing up a mound about twelve inches high about the trunk of each tree just before winter is very trifling. By this all the litter suitable for piece wise is all the litter suitable for piece wite is all the litter suitable for piece wite in the suitable for piece wite in the piece to be piece with the piece to little the litter suitable for piece with the piece to little the litter suitable for piece with the piece to little the litter suitable for piece with the litter suitable sanguine expectations, for not only did these Baths remove mineral poisons, but cured many diseases, some of which were the result of minerals, and some were not.

We see different modes recommended to protect young trees in water—such as smearing the trees with washes of an off-usive flavor—or coating them with tin, or birch bark. But there will be no need of such trouble or cost, for a bank of earth will prove quite as useful as a tin or lead sheathing-and the cost not a half a cent for a tree.

PRESERVATION OF FORESTS.—Where will coming generations get their supplies of timber? How they will lament the bleak and naked hills, and cry out against us for despoiling them of their chief beauty, and leaving behind us few or no traces of our forest seenery, except in the painted landscapes in our parlors? If our forests are so valuable now for timber and fuel, will they not be still more so to the next generation? Then why strip them off so remorselessly? Rather let them be husbanded. Let lessly? Rather let them be husbanded. Let them be thinned out, not utterly demolished. A careful calculation show that sixty thousand A careful calculation show that sixty thousand acres of pine wood are cut every year in New York, and that at this rate, in the year 1875, these trees will have disappeared from this part of the country: It is said also, that "the produce of tilled lands carried to the tide water by the Eric Canal, in one year amounted to $8,170,000 worth of property; that of farm stock for the same year is given at $3,230,000: that of the forest, in lumber, staves, &c, at $4,770,000. Thus the forest yield more than the stock, and more than half as much as the farm lands." Shall we then utterly and forever exhaust this source of comterly and forever exhaust this source of comfort and wealth? Let us beware, lest we k.l. the goose which lays such golden eggs? Forest trees should be preserved, also, for their beneficial influence upon the climate. It is universally conceded that the winters of the | mail northern states are colder than they were thirty and forty years ago; and that the weather generally is more windy, fluctuating and d sagreeable. We have greater extremes of heat and cold, and severer droughts. Peaches once grew in abundance throughout Central New York; now, it is almost impossible to raise them. The w eat and some other crops are more uncertain. These things are ascribable, not so much to any deterioration of the soil, as to the destruction of our forests. Formerly, our farms had belts of wood land, which broke the force of the winter and spring winds ; our hilltops were covered with battalions of trees which defend the slopes and vales. The snow was not blown off from the tender grain crops in winter, nor were the fields laid bare to the blighting winds of ear.y spr ng.

One of the greatest drawl a ks to farm life on the western praries is the absence of forest trees. Wood for lumber and fuel is scarce, a d house and lands are exposed to the rake of merciless winds in winter and spring Almost every mail brings account of extreme suffering at the west, on the open prairies. To make those laads a paradise for the farmer, they need noth ng so much as the kindly shelter of

In conclusion, we earn stly plead with the farmer for a more considerate use of his wood. Remove old trees, but touch the young with sparing hand. Clear up your valleys but do not strip bure the hill tops. Leave groups and single trees here and there in your pastures, both for the comfort of your flocks and herds, and for the beauty of the landscape. Plant belts along the north and west lines of your grainfields and shelter your houses. For the purposes of shelter evergreens are best ; but mingle with these such rapid growing trees as the larch, searlet flowered maple, Dutch elm. basswood and yellow locust. The time is coming when they who exert themselves to save the emnant of our noble wood-lands, and who plant trees for the benefit of posterity, will be considered wise men and public benefactors.-American Agriculturist.

But it is now too late to dig about trees, and the course to be pursued is to watch and beat down the snow till mid-winter, when there will be but little danger.

On our own farm the cats will kill more mice than chickens, and we find it profitable to keep them, lest we should be overrun with unprofitable stock. In our young orchard of two hundred and thirty trees, not a piece of bark was gnawed last year, though twenty of the trees stood quite near an old stone wail. The orchard was tilled and no litter was left on the surmineral poisons, but cured many diseases, some of which has proven to be one of the most important and wonderful discoveries of the age, from its ability to extract minerals from the human system.

Some eight years ago, a physician of Cincinnati discovered the process of extracting minerals from the body, by galvanism; more recently. M. Verges, of New York, an electro-gilder, having suffered from the introduction of his art, conceived the idea of removing them by the same processes, he succeeded in doing so, and quickly recovered. He then applied the same means to others similarly affected, with like results. His success exceeded his most sanguine expectations, for not only did these Baths remove mineral poisons, but cured many diseases, some of which
