Cultivation of Celery.

The following directions for the cultivation of this excelleut vegetable, (which we find in an exchange paper, uncredited,) are in the main correct; but we have known good celery made from seed sown as late as June, in this climate. It should be on the table of every reader of the Farmer, during the winter and spring months, and we hope to see more attention paid to its cultivation hereafter:

Very early in the spring, if the frost is out of the ground, prepare a small bed of light, rich earth in a warm, sheltered situation, in which the seed must be sown for an early crop. Break the mould very fine, as the seed is small, and rake the surface even; sow the seed, but not too thickly, and cover with light rich mould, about a quarter of an inch deep. The plants should be kept thin in the seed-bed, and picked out when fit upon a surface of fresh earth well manured. They should be watered and shaded until they take root, and in drawing from seed-bed, let some of the strongest plants remain, to be put out for an early drill. They should be planted out before they become too strong; and if they have acquired a large ball of earth and roots, these and the straggling leaves on the sides should be cut away, in part, before planting out to remain.

Trenches must be made early in the summer (20th June) for the early, and a month later for the main crop, at four and a half or five feet distance, a foot broad and a foot deep. At the bottom lay four inches of well rotted dung, digging it in, or placing over it a covering of three inches of rich earth, raked even, in which the plants, now about six inches high, must be planted six inches apart, taking care to remove all side-shoots. In hot weather the plantation should be made in the evening, a liberal supply of water should be administered. When the sun is powerful, they should be shaded until they take root, which will assist in keeping the soil moist.

As the plants begin to grow hoe them on each side, and between them, with a small hoe; and, as they further increase in growth, proceed to earth or blanch them; in doing which, the soil to be used should be in a pulverized state, and prepared properly with the spade. The stalks of the out side leaves should be kept close up, to prevent the earth from getting between the stems of the out side leaves and the inner ones; for if it be allowed to get there, it checks the plants and makes the celery bad. A little earth may be added every week or ten days, according as the crop advances, always leaving about six inches of the leaves above the surface of the soil. Particular attention should be paid in earthing up, that soil be dry, otherwise it is apt to rot the plants and render them unfit for use.

For the autumnal crop the white is superior in flavor, but the red is said by some to be better calculated for standing through the winter. If long and hard frosts be apprehended, a quantity of celery should be taken up and laid in bed of sand or light earth, in a shed or celler; for when the ground is deeply frozen, it is sometimes impassible to get it with out tearing it to pieces, and it may be kept very well for several weeks in a cellar.—New England Farmer.

KINDS OF GREEN CORN FOR TABLE USE.—Every farmer and every amateur grower of horticultural products should plant various kinds of corn, to be used for boiling or roasting while in its green state. Now, which are the best kind? Answer—the early Jefferson, white flour corn, twelve rowed sweet, and Stowel's evergreen.

The early Jefferson, if grown a few degrees further South than where seed is procured, will produce roasting-ears in sixty days from the time of planting. The ears are about eight inches long, and the corn white and a little flinty, the kernels of good fair size, and the taste almost sweet.

The white flour corn does not mature for roasting or boiling purposes under about ninety days. The ears are from nine to eleven inches long; the corn a dull white, a very little flinty, kernels fair size, good for eating green, and all the overplus, when ripe, will grind into meal almost as white and handsome as the best of wheat flour.

The twelve rowed sweet corn is an improvement on the old common sweet corn, having larger ears and larger kernels.

The Stowell's Evergreen is a variety of sweet corn that requires longer to mature than any other variety. It furnishes a supply of green corn very late in the season, the ears, many of them, being suited to boiling in November; and if left in shocks in the field, or gathered and hung up with the husks on, is often good for eating during the winter.—Ohio Farmer, March 28.

PLANT EVERGREENS THIS MONTH.—Evergreen trees and shrubs may be planted at almost all seasons, but we decidedly prefer the middle of May in this latitude, and indeed anywhere north of Virginia. Further south, they may be transplanted a little earlier. As a general rule, the best time is when the soil has become settled and and somewhat warmed, and before the dry seasons; or when the young buds are just pushing forth into a new growth.

In a nother article we have described some of the best kinds. No manure is required for evergreens. A good loam is the most appropriate. If a heavy clay or light saud, it is always better to dig out a space three to five feet in diameter, according to the size of the tree to be grown, and fill in good soil at least one foot, or, better, two feet in depth. In planting these, or indeed, any kind of trees, great care should be taken to loosen the soil well, and have the holes so large that the roots shall not be cramped in the least, and also provide good soil for their extension. A little care of this kind will pay well, both in the more rapid growth and in the longer life of the tree.

HOW MUCH TIMOTHY SEED TO AN ACRE.—It is a well known fact that if you do not sow grass seed, weeds will occupy the spare ground. It is, therefore, desirable to sow just as much seed as, when tillered out, will cover the entire surface. If Clover is to be sown with it—as is a common but erroneous practice, because they do not ripen together—then twelve quarts of timothy to an acre is sufficient. If the meadows is to be seeded with timothy alone, use not less than half a bushel of clean seed to an acre.
