Cultivation of the Prairies.

Sanford Howard, of the Boston Cultivator in one of his letters from the "Great West," to that paper, gives the following accounts of the first operations in prairie farming.

"The first object with a farmer on taking up a prairie farm, is to plow the ground. The natural vegetation does not make a close sward, like some of the cultivated grasses, but the roots are very tough, and considerable force is required to sever them. A plow of peculiar construction is used. It is sometimes made wholly of steel, but a steel share is indispensable, as no other metal will hold an edge keen enough to do the work properly. The shape of the plow is adapted to turning a wide shallow furrow, it having been ascertained that the sod rots much quicker when the furrows are thin. The beam of the plow is supported on two wheels, which gives the implement a steadiness of operation. The im plement is, on the whole, well adapted to its purpose, and the work by it is, in some instances, nearly unexceptionable. The furrows are cut of uniform width and depth, the sod comcut of uniform width and depth, the sold com-pletely inverted, and left in such a manner that decomposition must take place in the least pos-sible time. Oxen are generally used for break-ing the sod, from three to five yoke being put to the plow, and from an acre and a half to two and a half acres are plowed in a day. The plowing is done whenever it is convenient to do it. If it is done in the summer, the sods gets rotted sufficiently by spring to cross-plow it and sow wheat, or it is in good condi-tion for corn. If it is plowed in autumn, or early in the spring, it will answer for "seed corn." Holes are opened in the furrows with an axe, and the seed corn dropped in. From that time to harvest the field is not touched. The sod is so tough that it is of no use to try to use any inplement of cultivation on it. Such pletely inverted, and left in such a manner that to use any inplement of cultivation on it. Such corn sometimes yields thirty bushels to the acre, and an average annual yield is fifteen to twenty bushels.

" The sod becomes pretty thoroughly rotted during the first season, and the ground is easily plowed afterwards. It becomes, in fact, too loose for either wheat or grass. This may not agree with ideas of some people who are always talking about the necessity of a loose soil, but the fact can't be "rubbed out." Au average yield of corn, after the first season, and sometimes a hundred bushels to the acre are obtained.

BLIND OR WOLF TEETH IN HORSES.—I wish some of your subscribers would inform me through THE CULTIVATOR, whether young har-ses have what the farmers here call Wolf teeth. I was told a few days ago, that two Bilmira, April 7, 1856. of my promising colts had Wolf teeth, and that if they were not knocked out soon, they would soon go blind. Any information will much oblige

JNO. M. E. VALK, Meadow Bluff, Va. In no work on the diseases of horses, as we know, is what are called "blind teeth," noticed. The first notice we find by a sonthern writer as follows

"There occurs in some horses, between the ages of three and six, between the bridle tooth and grinder, a small. long tooth, without roots, and not inserted in a socket but merely in the gum of the upper jaw. It has never been alluded to in any system of farriery, but our planters can trace its existence in this State for more than half a century.

" It may and doubtless does occur in horses of any shaped head, but in the cases on my own farm, it was in horses of dished heads. One had gone entirely blind before I was aprised of the cause, and the other two I re

" It is conjectured by some to be peculiar to Indian corn feeding ; by others, to hot climate. The three cases under my own observation were in horses raised on my own farm ; and not having ever seen any illustration elsewhere, I am inclined to believe it is confined to the South."

The publication of the above brought us seval statements from different parts of the country, all the writers agreeing that the "blind teeth" were the cause of blindness, and that they should be extracted as soon as discovered.
