Cut your hay at the right time Philosophy and practice seldom agree. When in the right time? is the question for solution. Our neighbor-one of them-cut his hay a week in advace of most of his brother farmers-cut it very soon after the seed had commenced to form, frequently before the bloom had disappeared-cured it in the sun partially-not altogether. No one had better hay. His crop was secured before any of it had became wood. Dry sticks, and the fragrant, well cured hay in his barns, were not analogous. Another neighbor waited until others were done, that he might obtain help at cheaper rates. Two weeks after other had finished his "last day of having" came. There was another gain, he sail, by this course. The grass was riper and made faster-more was accomplished in a day-hence, it did not cost near the amount to do his having that it did other people.

Of course not, but his complaint was, when winter came, " My hay does not spend well. My cattle eat heartily, but do not thrive as they should. Neighbor A. does not feed his cattle as well I do mine, yet they are in far better

The hay, sir, the hay makes the difference. Cut it at the right time-just before the seed is matured-before woody matter predominates in the stalk. Some suppose the woody matter is useless as an article of nourishment, but it is not indigestible, though insoluble in water. The age of the grass alone does not govern the amount of nutritive matter when made into hav, but soil, climate and season modify its value greatly. We would prefer to ent it in bloom, (or a portion of the crop) rather than let it remain to shell its seed. There are chemical considerations which enter into these directions. There is no doubt but there is more of the element of nutrition in grass at the time of flowering, but it is a question of the control of the con to cut it in bloom, (or a portion of the crop) tity after the process of curing, when such process is commenced before, or soon after, the seed commences to form. This is an open question. The quicker your hay is made and secured after it has reached the proper state, the better. The cutting of the first hay crop ought not to extend beyond three weeks.

We think the value of the grass crop, after it is made into hay, depends as much on the manner of curing as on the time of cutting. The whole crop may be spoiled in curing, no matter when cut. The following practical directions are given from experience

Cut in the morning. If the grass is heavy, or green and damp, stir out. Let it wilt .-Rake up and put in small cocks, if good weather, larger if "catching weather.". Let it remain in the cock until it has sweat thoroughly. Tip over, shake apart. Give it one or two hours good sun, and stack, or stow it in your mow

Do not mow more than you can secure in cocks the same day. Night dews injure hay, if partially cured. Throw salt on your hay, especially if it is clover, as you put it on the mow-four quarts to each ton .- Pra-rie Far-

DESTROY YOUR WEEDS .- It is curious sight to see farmers fighting weeds all through spring and summer, and then letting all that escape to the breeze, ready for any amount of mischief in the spring.

Now, we hold that no good farmer or gardener will ever let a weed go to seed upon his domain. Have them out! hoe them out out with them at any cost ! The barn-yard and muck heap will be glad of them; and when secured green, they are worth their weight in any kind of manure, bardly excepting guano. But when the seeds, are ripe then nothing but fire should be their portion.

There is an old story of a race of beings who were doomed as a punishment, to pour water in a seive till it should be full.

Let each farmer see to it, that the seive through which daily meal comes has no tares in its bottom .- Life Illustrated .

WEEDING THE GARDEN .-- Much of the successful gardening now depends upon keeping the weeds down and frequent scarifying of the soil. Every weed that is suffered to stand, draws something from the aliment of the cultivated crops. Every one that is plucked up loosens the soil, and admits the air and moisture to nourish the plants. Keep the hoe moving in the garden briskly this month, if you world.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN WATER PIPE

CHAIN PUMP TUBING.

THE subscriber having lately commenced the manufac-ture of WATER TUBING, at Wilkes-Barre, Pa. with WYCKOFF'S PATENT BORING MACHINE, which produces the article so long sought after by Purap Manufacturers and others, would call the attention of Rail road Superintendents, Pump Dealers, Farmers, Village Corporations and all others in want of cheap and durable Water Conductors, to the Pipes manufactured by this process. They are made from solid Pine and other scantling from 3 to 6 inches square, according to size of bore and pressure required, in sections 8 feet long, with a socket joint accurately fitted, both air and water tight. As Wychoff's Machine bores directly through the centre every time, the timber need only be large enough to sustain the pressure wanted, as the smaller they are the more perfectressure wanted, as the smaller they are the more perfect bressire wanted, as the smaller they are the more perfectly they become saturated with water, and the longer they will last when laid in the ground. It is a well-ascertained fact that while the body or thick part of a pump log is entirely decayed, the thin sharpened end will be sound; at the same time they never stop up from impurities of the water or being flattened, are free from rust or poison as convenient and the properties of the state o ous oxydes, lasting about as long as lead or iron, at only ous onydes, lasting about as long as lead of fron, as only one-sixth the cost.

The above-mentioned Pipes have been extensively and thoroughly tested in most of the Northern States, for the past two years, and wherever introduced they immediately supersede all other kinds of Pipe or Chain Pump Tubing. They can be made to stand any desirable, head of water, and can be shipped to any part of the country with safety and at small expense. safety and at small expense.
