Grinding Feed.

Experimental farmers have long urged the importance, and even ne essity, of chopping or grinding hay, as well as other food, for cattle and horses. The lazy drones have had a hearty laugh over the idea, and call it " book farming."

Now, the theory of chopping and grinding food is based on a principle which lies at the foundation of animal physiology. Rest is essential to the accumulation of muscle, as well as fat. If we wish to increase an animal in flesh, or fat, we do not work him.

Now, a cow eats one thirteenth of her own weight in hay a day, to keep her in good order and we may thus calculate the amount of labor required to masticate the food, and fit it for the stomach. The labor of chopping or grinding twenty-five pounds of dry hay a day is no small item. This excessive labor is performed by one set of muscle-the jaws ; but by sympathy affects all the other muscles, causes the blood to circulate quicker, the breath faster, the consumption of food greater, and still the growth of the animal is retarded.

If a machine was invented to grind hay, the If a machine was invented to grind hay, the ground article would approximate in value to unground oats, in producing fat and muscle. Chopping hay and stalks is valuable just in proportion as it approximates to grinding, and relieves the animal of the labor of grinding it. An animal fed on ground or mineed food, may perform an amount of labor equal to grinding it fit for digestion, and fat as fast as another which does not labor, but grinds its own food. HAY MAKING .- It has been definitely settled that the great object to be sought is the preservation of hay in a condition most nearly resembling the grass in a perfect state. In order to accomplish this end, grass should be cut when it contains the greatest amount of glutten, sugar and such other matter as are soluble in water. When the plant has formed its seed, this stage has passed and woody fibre predominates-this being insoluble cannot assimilate itself to the requirements of the animals stomach. When grass is in full flower, mals stomach. When grass is in full flower, but before the seed has formed, it contains the greatest amount of saccharine matter ; this speedily diminishes as it ripens, which together with the decay of the leaves, causes a loss in its nutritive properties. Quite a number of grasses are exceptions to this rule—some con-taining the most nutriment when fully ripe— but as a general principle, for the benefit of both hay and the land upon which it is grown, we would advise the cutting at full flowér. The process of curing should, if possible, be perfected in the cock. Hay thus made retains more of the color and juices of the grass than when thinly spread over the field exposed to the rays of the burning sun. It should, if spread, be gathered into win-rows or " foot cock" at night—dew falling upon it when thus scattered, results in more or less injury. The point after cutting is to preserve it from der and rain, as these soon wash away the soluble

HOW TO OFTAIN EARLY LIMA BEANS .- We observed recently an excellent mode of starteight inch pots were placed in a small forcing house, each pot filled with good rich soil, and as many beans planted therein as would form a hill. In a very few days the plants broke ground, and grew rapidly in the warm, moist atmosphere of the house. When of a sufficient size, the ground is prepared and the pot emptied of contents, a hole dug, and the mass of earth containing the plants, remaining un-broken, placed in it. The soil is then filled in arcund it, and the job is finished—the poles having been put in their places previously.— Another erop of plants can then be obtained which produces the article so long sought after by Pump Manufacturers and others, would call the attention of Rail road Superintendents, Pump Dealers, Farmers, Village Corporations and all others in want of cheap and durable Corporations and all others in want of cheap and durable Water Conductors, to the Pipes manufactured by this pro-cess. They are made from solid Pine and other scantling from 3 to 6 inches square, according to size of bore and pressure required, in sections 8 feet long, with a socket joint accurately fitted, both air and water tight. As Wy-choff's Machine bores directly through the centre every time, the timber need only be large enough to sustain the pressure wanted, as the smaller they are the more perfect-ly they become saturated with water, and the longer they will last when laid in the ground. It is a well-ascertain-ed fact that while the body or thick part of a pump log is entirely decayed, the thin sharpened end will be sound ; at the same time they never stop up from impurities of the water or being flattened, are free from rust or poison-ous oxydes, lasting about as long as lead or iron, at only on exixth the cost. us oxydes, lasting about as long as lead or iron, at only ne-sixth the cost.
